SOUTHAMPTON [Append

THE

SOUTHAMPTON GUIDE;

COMPRISING

AN ACCOUNT

OF THE

ANCIENT AND PRESENT STATE

Of that Town, and its Neighbourhood;

TOGETHER WITH

EVERY PARTICULAR NECESSARY FOR THE INFORMATION

Of the STRANGER and TRAVELLER.

by Rev. Letchiot.

SOUTHAMPTON ROOMS.

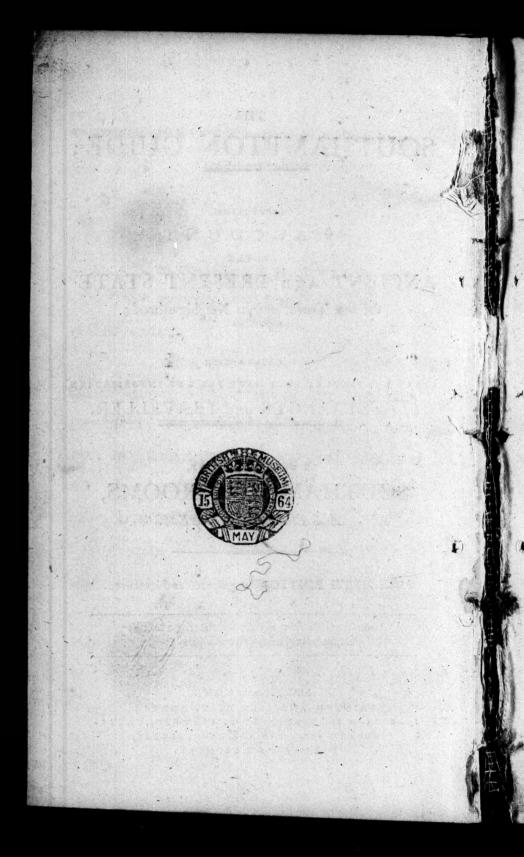

A SATIRICAL POEM.

The FIFTH EDITION, augmented and improved.

Urbs speciosa situ, nitidis pulcherrima tectis, Grata peregrinis, deliciosa suis.

SOUTHAMPTON :

PRINTED AND SOLD BY T. BAKER; SOLD ALSO IN LONDON BY S. CROWDER, PATER-NOSTER-ROW, AND ALL BOOKSELLERS, IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

ADVERTISEMENT

Though Beneficiens to the store that the period of מרל ערמונים מחול ברוציות שונים ו

beautioned by binous slands

TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

AS no pains have been omitted to render the present Edition of the Southampton Guide more perfect and complete than any thing of the kind that has hitherto appeared, it is hoped it may meet with the approbation and patronage of the Public. The Editor has drawn his materials both from the authentic records of the most creditable historical authors, and from curious manuscripts which have hitherto remained unnoted in the libraries of certain learned friends. He trusts therefore that the Reader will find as accurate and ample a detail of historical facts, and as full an account of the town of Southampton, and country around it, as the nature and size of the following work would admit; and is induced to slatter himself, that both the curious antiquary, and modern traveller, will have no reason to be distaitssied with the entertainment which it offers to their respective tastes.

SOUTHAMPTON ROOMS,

POEM.

WHILE various Themes the Muses' train invite, And losty strains superior Bards delight; While some can verse to none but Peers afford, And find a thousand virtues in My Lord; While the starv'd rhymer, slighted by the Nine, Dreams of Parnassus and forgets to dine; Are there not strains unnotic'd by the throng, Which yet unblam'd may grace the Poet's song? The Muse who nightly on my call attends, And still her love with sweet instruction blends, Ev'n now before me stood confest to view, She bade me sing, and chose the subject too.

Near those green shades*—the haughty Norman's shame—

Rife Hampton's tow'rs, well known to ancient fame,
Where the gay train at stated times repair,
To lose their care, and breathe salubrious air;
There ev'ry Muse and every Grace combine,
To charm the senses, and the taste refine.
Thy spires, Southampton, glittering on the morn;
Thy gates, which dreadful warlike chiefs adorn;
Thy time-worn tow'rs, by many an Age decay'd,
And walls with venerable moss array'd:
Thy beauteous Maids for chassity renown'd;
Thy Bards, each season, with fresh laurels crown'd:
When I forget them may I cease to sing,
Or "prove the idle Poet of a K g!"

Yet not the Muse sincere can partial prove, Ev'n to the dearest object of her love, Well pleas'd to praise, yet sometimes forc'd to blame, By honest means she soars to honest same, Keeps Truth for ever present to her view, And gives to Satire, what is Satire's due.

Can we admire, amidst the vary'd crowd, To meet the fordid, the morose, or proud;

* NEW FOREST; to make which, a vast number of houses and churches were overthrown.

Or, while the pert and idle trip along, To view mad folly mingling in the throng? If these offend, in Truth's bright mirror seen, The poet makes not, but describes, the scene.-But hark! the lofty, ample doors unfold, Harmonious turning as on hinge of gold; The Train pours in, the young, the grave advance, Nor age itself denies to lead the dance. All gay and glorious! How each count'nance blooms; From ev'ry breast how Zephyr steals perfumes! Ask not if NATURE all these sweets bestow, She bids indeed the vulgar rose to blow, With age it withers-ART alone can give, On the pale cheek, the beauteous bloom to live; ART can, alone, make fweetest scents exhale From those whose breath would taint the passing gale.

Lo! where Nerissa mingles with the throng,
And dreams she leads the courtly train along.
Has she not charms?——"Oh yes!" the room resounds,
"There must be charms in twenty thousand pounds!"
Has she not charms? Ask yonder youth who quits Surrounding belles, smart girls, and London wits?
Nay, for her sake, the sair Flmira leaves,
Who sighs, deserted; but in vain she grieves—
Love conquers all, by ancient Bards we're told;
But modern Love gives way to conquiring gold.

NERISSA triumphs—to her car she chains
The vanquish'd youth, who sighs in melting strains;
Those melting strains the victress soft returns,
With unseign'd passion for the youth she burns;
In lisping accents is her love confest,
She pats his cheeks, and leans upon his breast.
Why should the maidens taunt, the witlings sleer?
NERISSA is—but in her fixtieth year.

Will this move wonder?—Do but yonder view The old Sir GAM that tripping lass pursue, While she has youth and he has gold to spare, Fashion will still pronounce the bargain fair. 'Tis sit the gouty Knight should draw his purse, His wife, or mistress—always saves a nurse.

Can Love behold his rites by fuch profan'd, By fuch can HYMEN fee his honors stain'd, And not in vengeance give his wrath to flow In one vast torrent of connubial woe, While Jealousy, Distrust, Aversion, wait; And curse, completely curse the wedded state?

Sir MACAHONE, you see too, is come down, Sir MACAHONE, but just return'd from town.

"Oh! such an air and mien" (my Lady cries),

"Dear Mrs. DAINTY, did you mark his eyes—

- " Nay you shall know him: Well, I do protest,
- "That chit Miss TWITTER's so completely blest.
- " Lud! fure the girl has got a birthday-fuit;
- "But then her father! What a vulgar brute!
- " She cannot hope to carry fuch a beau;
- "The Baronet can never floop so low."-
- ' Dear Lady GRIZZLE! but he is fo bold,
- '(They fay)'----"Oh Ma'am! he's worth his weight in gold,
- "But here's my Lady BAB-Lud! how she'll rant;
- " For Lady BAB, you know, is TWITTER's aunt!
- " And the dear man himself! Well TWITTER's lost!
- "She ne'er was famed for wit, although a toalt."

Sir MACAHONE, when young, from Liffy's fide To England came, to feek a wealthy bride, Wit, Gamester, Captain, various shapes he try'd; Through many a motley scene successless pass'd, He turns the Man of Quality at last; To dear Southampton fails not to repair, And quickly wins the hearts of half the fair—But hush! it has been whisper'd here, of late, Sir Mac—has neither Title nor Estate.

My Lady TROMPINGTON comes next in view, A London Widow, rich, and buxom too;

Fresh health, fresh spirits in her looks appear, A toast, though in her six-and-thirtieth year. How lively she, how debonaire and gay! How happy!—were but EMILY away.—

- "You have a daughter, Ma'am, so young and fair."
- 'Oh! name her not, a chit not worth your care,
- ' A forward Miss, a woman by all means,
- ' And yet the girl has never feen her Teens.'
- " My Lady TROMPINGTON, sure you mistake,
- " For Miss was born before I knew Lord RAKE,
- "And we've been married fixteen years, I vow."
- 'I'm fure that's what I never can allow;
- 'You fure must think I know my daughter's age,
- And that is three years less, I dare engage.'

All this, by chance, if young EMILIA hears, Heav'ns! how her mother in her eyes appears: But then her Ladyship has got a tongue, And Miss is snubb'd because Mamma is young.

But wild Bell Flippant no fuch laws restrain, Deliver'd early from a mother's reign.
Ere thrice five summers have matur'd her charms,
Her rising bosom beats with soft alarms;
At ball or play, ambitious still to shine,
She thinks her beauty more than half divine;

A dozen swains must all her steps attend, A dozen fuitors at her shrine must bend; And most she glories when by chlidish wiles, She deems another's lover she beguiles. Yet while her faithful train her charms extol, The Duke of BARNET swears she's but a doll: Sir HURLY BURLY laughs at her outright, And Miss PEWITZEN calls her child, in spite; Nay, Madam Bowzer, when she lost Sir Hugh, Declar'd she'd give the Babe correction due. But what of this! shall BELL forego the field, When to her pow'r fo many heroes yield? Forbid it pride; nay more, forbid it shame!

- " I'm now a toast, and shall I lose my fame?
- " Does not his Grace of BASSET take delight
- "To play and dance with me each Public Night;
- "Don't in my train the two Lord BUBBLES shine?
- "And, above all, Sir MACAHONE is mine;
- " He's ready to protect me with his life.
- " And—if I please make me his Lady-wife."

Thus reasons BELL, and spends life's early spring An idle, giddy, discontented Thing! Nor feeks one charm or virtue, to engage. In the full fummer of maturer age; Each batter'd rake still deems the girl his prey; Who flatters most will bear the prize away.

Who has not heard of our Miss CRAMPLEY's fame?
What honors may not DORCAS CRAMPLEY claim?
Who, of base men, and treach'rous wiles afraid,
Full five-and-forty years has lived a Maid,
And still, though tir'd of the unsocial life,
Swears "she can't think of being made a Wise."

- " But did you hear how Lord JOHN RATTLE talk'd,
- " I'm fure his Lordship has been greatly balk'd;
- "Yet still these men, without all shame or fear,
- " Will tell their love-tales in a maiden's ear;
- "Ah, what a life is mine!-Good morning, BAB;
- " Mife TWITTER's grown as four as any crab;
- " And fo's BELL FLIPPANT-Pray, let either take
- "That precious Gift of Heav'n, their Irish Rake.
- " I hate the men; but I'll be judg'd by you
- "What in my case can a poor Maiden do:
- " I must hear all, but yet I'll yield to none!
- " Or yield to dear Sir COCK-A-HOOP alone.

Sir Cock-A-HOOP!—scarce fit to go to school,
The Lady's play-thing, and the Muse's tool!
Proud without honor, without talents vain,
Dup'd by a fawning, flatt'ring, idle train;
He swims along in all the pride of dress;
As if his Riches made his Folly less.
If in close conclave with his Fools to sit,
And call himself the arbiter of wit,

If —'s damn'd pieces drawling to rehearse, Or penning dull lampoons in doggrel verse; If talk eternal,—(talking to no end); While scarce a blockhead will his speech attend; If to the town th' ambiguous jest t'afford, "And now a Lady trip, and now a Lord;" If these are talents, then the Knight shall shine, At least if Verse can make him so, Divine.

But fee who yonder gravely stalks along; Say, Muse, is he a subject for my Song? " From fair Augusta, lo! the fage withdraws, "And leaves a while, to plead his Country's cause." What Orator is this fo far renown'd? What Senator, with deathless laurels crown'd? " Not by fuch titles he aspires to Fame; "A Patriot ! and MALVOLIO is his name." Can there be aught more facred, Muse, unfold? Though rolling years return an Age of Gold, Than he who burning with his country's love, Would ev'ry rough extreme of danger prove, Face foreign foes, curb arbitrary pow'r, And check rebellion in the dang'rous hour? "Tis mighty well of fuch a one to fing? "But our MALVOLIO aims at no fuch thing; "To quit his trade, to crowd a common-hall, " And loud for W-s and Liberty to bawl;

"To prate of tyranny among the Great,

" Himself a tyrant in his petty state;

"To drink Bostonian freedom in a bowl,

"Round which a thousand aukward emblems roll;

"To talk of fancy'd grievances and woes,

" And with a speech of W-s to wipe his nose:

"These are his virtues - what his vices are,

"His intimates and family declare."
But here we flop: T'were labour thrown away
Should we diffect this Infect of a day!

Next fee the raw-bon'd ARCHY B-proceed, A bonny laddie, from the banks of Tweed: His air is lofty but his means are fmall, Yet less may serve for one who saves his all: From ancient Scotia's land, in happy time, He fought the warmer (wealthier) English clime; Full of himself, with scorn his peers he ey'd, And what his av'rice fought, his pride deny'd: To nurse mean pride his character has been, Which almost makes economy a fin. Late to Ierne's land the loon repair'd, As 'kenning to live there lik' ony laird;' But not th' indignant shores his feet retain, Cruel Ierne fends him back again. Now thrice three moons in England has he mix'd With Men, and here his ne plus ultra fix'd.

This is the country for whose wealth he burns, And from whose bourn the Scotchman ne'er returns. He with MALVOLIO still a war maintains, Both fland invincible—for want of brains; With W-s and B-IL one tags the lame dispute, The other raves all day for I B-E. Ask you the city patriot for a toast, He tells you that 'America is lost:' Ask what's o'clock; he'll say, "the times are hard, " And must be so, till vil-ns meet reward, "Till gibbets all the roads to London fill, " And noble blood streams fast on Tower-hill." Ask the North Briton for a pinch of shuff, " All but the Scotch is axecrable fluff:" Observe, to Richmond what a pleasant ride; "The banks of Thames are naught to dear Tweedfide:" Talk you of heroes which our days produce, They're "a' but filly loons to ROBERT BRUCE;" He loves our gracious King, beyond dispute, Not for his virtues; for the fake of B-E; Rivals, agree! why shake your empty pate? Nor this can ferve, nor that can harm the state. Parties and factions loud may rage and bawl, But genuine Folly's of no fide at all.

Ah! vive la Bagatelle! see who comes here, How gay his cloaths, how thin his cheeks appearMonsseur Le Noir, behold his bold advance; Monsieur Le Noir is just arriv'd from France; For ever sprightly, gay and debonair, Cuts capers high, and laughs at grief and care; To every female flimfy tribute pays, And gives to each a fulfome load of praise; Himself indiff'rent plies the dance and fong, Nor yet selects one female from the throng: Not so the Ladies; for his fake alone, They almost leave their dear Sir MACAHONE; Miss TWITTER and Miss FLIPPANT both assail His guarded heart, not doubting to prevail. How hard, alas! fuch conquests to improve, His vanity is touch'd, but not his love. "Miss TWITTER is his foul's supreme delight;" And then "BELL FLIPPANT is an angel quite." To each he tells his am'rous tale by turns, For each he swears in Cupid's flames he burns; At length, detected, fondly each complains; He fnuffs, trips off, yet talks of am'rous pains; Each Miss grows loud; allons! he leads the dance, And leaves them both—'Tis a la mode de France,

Would you the contrast of this scene explore?

Behold 'Squire BLUNT, an Englishman all o'er,

He cares not Threepence for your Dukes and Peers,

He d--ns all foreign fashions, "hates Mounseers;"

As for the Girls, he likes with them to play,
And just "to toy an idle hour away."
But "he can't cringe, he never was at France;"
Yet just for Fun the clown has learn'd to dance;
So might a bear—to both we oft give place;
Not for their merit, but their strange grimace.
Laugh, if you please, the 'Squire will tell you true,
"He danc'd in troth, to please himself, not you."
His acres best his merit may explain,
But farms and dunghills do not suit our strain:
His houses too, we can't the tale rehearse,
For lands and tenements would clog the verse.
Suffice it that 'Squire BLUNT is wealthy known,
And Madam BOWZER marks him for her own;

But who is she that with such artful leer,
Salutes each Lady, and accosts each Peer?
'Tis Mrs. Sly, of honorable name,
At Bath and Tunbridge late well known to same;
Who'd gain a mistress, or a wife discard,
Has but to wheedle her and to reward:
What semale, weary of her husband's pow'r,
Wants a gallant—to pass away an hour;
To make life bearable, let her apply,
And tell her utmost wish—to Mrs. Sly,

Her, Mr. Blubber but of late employ'd,
And Mr. Blubber all his hopes enjoy'd.

Near Thames-Street, now he comfortably dwells,
And by short weight his soap and candles sells;—
But he and Betsy once a-year repair
To dear Southampton, tir'd of City air;
Till a round sum, agreed on, they disburse,
Then, with sad hearts, go back, and empty purse:
Though Sly has whisper'd in his Betsy's ear,
She may receive the visits of a Peer:
What Peer? perhaps, you'll ask; —Lord GravelDOWN,

Known for his morals in each feaport-town: With him would any man suspect a wife, Whom Mrs. SLY consign'd to him for life? BLUBBER knows better how his cash is spent, The Peer may make a Carnival, of Lent.

Know you yon smirking figure? see him stand, Or rather loll; a paper in his hand!

He seems concern'd to hide it; but indeed
His only wish is that you all should read.

"Love-verses to the fair!" upon my life,
'Tis strange his pen has not ensur'd a wife!

Perhaps you'll say he's wedded to his Muse,
A forry match! which no wise man would chuse.

Proud of his flimfy works and always prone
To censure each performance but his own;
With dullest Satire, Epigrams as bad,
And Panegyrics' writ in "prose, run mad;"
He dreams he shines the Laureat of the town,
Nor can Mamurrus' self dispute the crown:
Mamur Rrus, taught in Greek and Latin school,
To count each syllable and laugh by rule,
Wise but to teaze, and learned to perplex,
Who gives no quarter to the softer sex,
But still diffects in wrath the poet's song,
And persecutes with words of six seet long.

Both these with proud contempt AVARO eyes, Who thinks that to be rich is to be wise; For health, not pleasure, hither he repairs, And calls this town the bane of youthful heirs; While young CLEANDER, prodigal and bold, His next of kin, and heir to all his gold, Laughs at his kintman, calls him fool or knave, And hopes, ere long, to gambol o'er his grave.

Such are the crowd the laughing muse surveys, Who, idly sluttering, spend their summer days; Should she proceed what numbers might be sung, Ere yet the poet had his lyre unstrung;

C 2

But pause we here: —Enough that in our song, Impartial satire has pourtray'd the throng. If, unchastis'd, their paths they still pursue, (The veil remov'd, and all confess'd to view,) If Folly still leads on the motley Train, Poets may write, and Doctors preach in vain.

SOUTHAMPTON GUIDE.

CHAP. I.

ANCIENT STATE OF SOUTHAMPTON.

THERE are no literary refearches attended with greater difficulties, or more frequent difappointment, than those which have for their object the early history of cities and towns. As places of this description usually originate in ages of ignorance and darkness, our investigations are not affished by any lights imparted by contemporary writers; and all our information must be derived from tradition, a fource.

fource not to be depended upon, as, from its nature, it foon becomes imperfect, inaccurate, and obscure.

This observation applies to the town of which we have undertaken to give some ac-Little authentic information can be now gained of its early state. Some fanciful authors, indeed, are inclined to give it an antiquity of four or five ages prior to the Christian æra.* As their accounts, however, feem to be founded chiefly on conjecture, and imaginary etymological analogies, it will not be worth while to weary the reader's patience by detailing them; particularly as it has been observed by an intelligent historian, That there can be nothing more uncertain, more obscure, or of which we are more ignorant, than the transactions that took place, in this country, during the British ages; that is, previous to the arrival of the Romans here. ± We ^{† &}quot;Equidem nihil occultius, nihil incertius, nihil igno" ratius, rebus Britannorum à principio gestis," &c. Hist.

^{*} Geoffry of Monmouth. Ross of Warwic, p. 23.

Pel. Virg. p. 18, l. 21.

We have no authority for imagining that Southampton existed even during the government of that warlike people in this country. No traces of Roman masonry having been discovered, or coins sound in it, a strong presumption arises, that they never inhabited a town on the same situation with the present one. The idea of the ancient station, Clausentum, occupying this spot is entirely erroneous, as I shall prove very satisfactorily in a subsequent chapter.

e

1

n

e

r, at ce

en

at

re

ıt,

is,

Ve

nolift. Hamtun, the old name of the town, speaks strongly in favor of its Saxon original; it being compounded of two genuine Saxon words, ham a house, and tun, or ton, a town; a simple and rational etymology, which a topographer of the present day, in vain, endeavors to discountenance.*

Whether or not, however, Hamtun was first built in the Anglo-Saxons' times, is a matter of little consequence; certain it is, its recorded recorded history does not commence till the ninth century. The first accounts we have of it, are very difastrous ones. The fierce and fanguinary Danes, who infested the English coasts without intermission for almost two centuries, made repeated descents on old Hamtun, and more than once wrapped the place in fire and blood. In the year 838, during the reign of Ethelwolf, these rovers landed from a fleet of thirty three gallies, and committed fad depredations on the town, and atrocities on its inhabitants. Wolphard the gallant governor of the county, however, collected a body of forces, and marched to the fpot where, in a bloody rencounter, he defeated the invaders, and drove them to their ships.+

^{*} Gough's Edition of Camden's Britannia. vol. I. p. 133.

But England was doomed to feel the scourge of this piratical enemy for many years, nor were they to be deterred from their attempts by a few inconsiderable defeats. As the Danes were a nation of sailors and free-booters, booters, their fleets, till the time of Alfred, were more numerous than those of any other European nation. They confifted of small, narrow ships, swift in failing, and easy to be worked. In these they ran up creeks and rivers; and, on debarking, drew them on shore, and surrounded them with entrenchments. Part of their force was left to protect these; and the remainder, scattering themfelves over the country, began the work of plunder. As the object of their expedition was booty, they feldom remained long in any one place, but retired as foon as they had completed their devastations; and were usually at fea, before any regular force could be gotten together, to retaliate the mischief they had committed.

[†] Sax. Chron. p. 73. Lel. Collett. v. 1. p. 192.

The floth and pufillanimity of Ethelred, gave the Danes a fair opportunity of ravaging his kingdom with impunity. In the year 981, they landed, from seven great ships, at Southampton, and committed their usual enormities. Scarcely twelve years elapsed before they were again seen at the same spot;

r

e t-

S

--

s,

fpot: repeating their cruelties and devaftations, headed by Sweyn, King of Denmark, and Olave, King of Norway. In this expedition, however, they did not adhere to their old plan of confining themselves to the fea-coast; but, imboldened by the inactivity of the king, feized on all the horfes they could find, and carried the terror of their arms into the more inland counties. The distress and danger of the English now became excessive: but the weakness of Ethelred could adopt no other means for lessening them than those of bribery. The two leaders were promifed a reward of 16,000l., on condition of their returning peaceably to the North. The terms were accepted, and Sweyn and Olave fat down quietly at Southampton, untill the money was paid them, when they fulfilled their contract.*

The exertions of Edmond Ironfide were unable to deprive the Danes of that footing which the imbecility of his predecessor had enabled enabled them to acquire in England; and, after repeated contests, he was under the necessity of yielding half his kingdom, to their leader Canute.

t,

-

o

y

y ir ne

1e

bs

m

re

n

h.

nd

nıl-

re

ng

ad

led

Several circumstances conspire to place Canute's character in a very respectable light. He not only appears to have been an able fovereign, and a gallant and enterprifing commander, but to have possessed habits of thought and reflection, rather uncommon in the leaders of his age and nation. Of this, the followed anecdote remains a proof: Crowned with fuccess, and furrounded with pomp and power, the ear of Canute was not without its flatterers. His courtiers vied with each other in their adulation towards him; and one of them, on a particular time, exclaimed in the hyperbolical language of Eastern compliment, That there was nothing but what he could effect. The king, willing to place the absurdity and meanness of the parafite in a proper light, ordered a chair to be carried to the fea-shore, (for he was then at Southampton) when the tide was flowing. Having

Having seated himself near the edge of the water, he commanded the waves to retire, and obey the voice of him that was omnipotent. They, however, observing their natural course, gradually approached, and at length began to wash his seet; when turning to the courtiers who surrounded him, he severely upbraided them for their flattery, remarking, That the most powerful created being was but impotent and weak, when compared with the Lord and Ruler of the universe; with whom omnipotence resided, and who alone could say to the ocean, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther."*

The ravages of the Danes had so reduced the inhabitants, and lessened the consideration of Hamtun, that when the Conqueror made his famous national survey, the particulars of which are preserved in Domesday-Book, we find the town contained only 79 men in demesne. The minute is to the following effect:

" In

^{*} Hen. Hunt. Hift. VI. p. 209.

1

e

d

t.

e,

0

rs

be

ne

nd

i-

to no

ced

on ade

ars ok,

nen ing

In

"In the borough of Hantune the king has
"79 men in demesne, who pay a land-tax of
"feven pounds, and also paid the same sum,
"in the time of King Edward the Con"fessor; twenty-seven of whom pay eight"pence each; two of them pay twelve-pence
"each; and the remaining sifty pay six-pence
"each."*

This extract, however, proves that Hamtun was a Burgh, and consequently a place of some trade and importance in the Anglo-Saxon times. †

Its incorporation by charter, took place in the reign of Henry II.; and confirmations of it were granted by Richard I., John, and Edward III. John, immediately on his coming to the throne, gave the farm of Southampton, together with the port of Portf-D mouth.

* See Hampsbire Extracted from Domesday - Book, by R. WARNER, Jun. 4to. Faulder, 1789. p. 279. Sold also by T. Baker, Southampton.

[†] For the nature of Saxon Boroughs, See Warner's Topographical Remarks relating to Hampshire; vol II. page 49, et infra. Blamire, 1793: Sold also by T. Baker.

mouth, to the burgesses of the former town, in confideration of an annual payment into the Exchequer, of 200l. by weight. Under the auspices of these charters, and aided by many local privileges and immunities, Southampton foon began to increase in opulence and confideration. A brisk wine-trade was carried on between it and the coast of France: the Stannaries were removed hither; and general commerce, the certain harbinger of wealth, began to unfold her advantages to the inhabitants. In the tenth of Richard I, the port-revenue amounted to 401. 5s. 8d.; and in the seventeenth year of his successor, the Compotus, or fum to be accounted for, was the usual redditus of 2001.; eleemosynary donations to some monks, 91. 5s.; and for fiftyeight tuns of French, Gascon, and Anjou wines, and for two tuns of Spanish or Portuguese, 50l. and one mark.

The jurisdiction of Southampton port was fo extensive, that its burgesses were liable to constant impositions from the artifices of the neighbouring maritime towns, which sometimes took

e

e

n

-

n

e

al

ı,

1-ie

d

ne

1e

ay-ou

r-

as to he ies

ok

took advantage of the distance between them and the head port, to exact dues from shipping to which they had no claim. In the seventeenth year of Edward II., Lymington practifed this piece of fraud; and an action was brought by the mayor and burgesses of Southampton, against that town, for having taken duties on falt, barley, and oats, to the amount of 40s., and customs on cloth, to the amount of 100s. The argument of the plaintiffs was, That they held their town, with the port, extending from beyond Hurst to Langstone, of the crown, at 220l. per annum. The jury confirmed the claim, and the corporation of Southampton recovered damages to the amount of 2001.

The increasing prosperity of Southampton received a sudden check in the reign of Edward III, during the contest which arose between Philip de Valois and that prince, respecting the succession to the crown of France. By the Salic law, instituted in very early times, no woman could sway the sceptre of that kingdom; so that upon the decease of D. 2. Charles

Charles the Fair, King of France, without iffue, (who had fucceeded by virtue of that law) Philip de Valois claimed it, as being the next male heir. But Edward who was fon of Isabella, (daughter of Philip the Fair, and fifter of the three last kings,) thought his title better than that of a cousin-german only, and purfued his claim by invading France with a powerful army. During the continuance of hostilities, a French sleet, confishing of fifty gallies, came to Southampton in October, 1338, reduced the town to ashes, and plundered its inhabitants of all their property. They did not, however, effect this devastation with impunity; the king of Sicily's fon, and feveral diftinguished personages of their party were flain, and the rest obliged to retire with precipitation to their shipping.

This disaster depressed, for a short time, the spirits of the Southampton people; but being an active, commercial race, and receiving the countenance and assistance of the king, they soon recovered from their consternation, and began building their town anew; fortifying it with with double ditches, fubstantial walls, and watch-towers. To these fortifications Richard II. added a strong castle, * built on an artificial mount, for the desence of the harbour, which so well answered the purposes of its erection, that, from this period, Southampton does not seem to have suffered further from the visits of the French.

t

n

g

t,

n

s,

)-

e-

's

of

to he ng

he

ey

nd g it

rith

The gallant army that reaped laurels of immortal verdure in the battle of Agincourt was mustered at Southampton, previous to its embarkation for France, in 1415. Of this encampment, there still remains a minute and accurate account (drawn up at the time) among the archives of the corporation. The spot, called Westport, + on which it was formed, is not now to be seen, being covered entirely D₂ with ^{*} Henry IV., by letters under the privy seal, granted to the corporation of Southampton, for repairing and strengthening the fortifications, 1001. per annum to be paid yearly by the collector of the subsidy on wool exported from thence; 1001. of the fee-sarm of the town; and he ordered a third 1001. to be subscribed by the inhabitants themselves.

[†] Warton's Note, Johnson and Steevens's Shak. v. VI. page 61.

with water. While the intrepid Henry was waiting for a favorable wind, at this town, to transport his forces to the coast of France, a deeply-concerted confederacy was happily discovered in its infancy; which, had it succeeded, would have effectually marred all his glorious projects.

The Earl of Cambridge, Lord Scrope of Masham, and Sir Thomas Grey of Heton, were the chief conspirators. Historians are divided as to the object of the plot; many afferting that the project was suggested by the court of France, which, terrified with the preparations of Henry, had engaged the three noblemen above-mentioned, by the bribe of a million of livres, to murder the king at Southampton; an account which Shakspere seems to have credited:

[&]quot;See you, my princes and my noble peers,

[&]quot;These English monsters! my Lord Cambridge here!

[&]quot;You know how apt our love was, to accord

[&]quot;To furnish him with all appertinents

[&]quot;Belonging to his honour; and this man

[&]quot; Hath,

"Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd

" And fworn unto the practices of France,

"To kill us here, in Hampton: to the which

"This knight, no less for bounty bound to us

"Than Cambridge is—hath likewife fworn: But oh!

"What shall I say to thee, Lord Scrope?
Thou cruel,

"Ingrateful, favage, and inhuman creature! *

Other writers (with greater probability) feem to think, the conspiracy was formed originally by the Earl of Cambridge, second son to the Duke of York, who having espoused the sister of the Earl of Marche, had zealously embraced the interests of that family, and engaged Lord Scrope, and Sir Thomas Grey, to second his views. † Be that as it may, the plot was fortunately discovered before it could be executed, and as the formalities of law were not much regarded in those days, the prisoners were speedily tried, condemned, and executed, at Southampton. Their remains were afterwards

of

y

is

of

as

d

ed

ny he ree f a th-

ms

, am-

d lath,

^{*} Hen. V. Act II. Scene 2.

⁺ Hollinsbed, page 549.

wards interred in the chapel of God's-house, there; where the following notification of the conspiracy and its ill-success may be seen. *

RICHARD, EARL OF CAMBRIDGE, LORD SCROPE OF MASHAM, SIR THO. GREY OF NORTHUMBERLAND, CONSPIRED

TO MURDER KING HENRY V.

IN THIS TOWN,

AS HE WAS PREPARING TO SAIL

WITH HIS ARMY,

AGAINST CHARLES VI. KING OF FRANCE;

FOR WHICH CONSPIRACY

THEY WERE EXECUTED, AND BURIED

NEAR THIS PLACE,
IN THE YEAR
MCCCCXV.

The motives of family interest, which, probably, induced the Earl of Cambridge to sorm this attempt against the life of his sovereign, will appear, according to the erring maxims of human policy, to palliate in a degree the iniquity iniquity of the plan; but how shall we dwell with pity on the memory of a man, who like Lord Scrope could break through the strong ties of gratitude and friendship, and for the paltry consideration of a little gold, enter into a deliberate conspiracy to murder his patron, protector, and king.

^{*} This monument was erected by the late Lord Delawar.

"The man that was his bedfellow, *

"Whom he hath cloy'd and grac'd with princely favours;

"That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell

"His fov'reign's life, to death and treachery!

In the reign of Edward IV., when the feuds between the houses of York and Lancaster raged with their utmost violence, scarcely a day elapsed, which was not marked by some hostilities of the opposite parties. That division of sentiments, with respect to the two contenders ^{*} Hollinshed says; "The said Lord Scrope was in such favour with the king, that he admitted him sometime to be his bedsellow." So much are opinions altered with times, that what was considered as a mark of honor and friendship in the sisteenth century, would now be justly looked on as highly indelicate and improper. It is well known that Cromwell, when he had any point to gain with the army, would take the common soldiers, individually, to his bed.

tenders for the crown, which pervaded almost all England, subfifted at Southampton; and blazed out with fo much fury on the occasion. that a fierce skirmish ensued between the partisans of the White and Red Roses, in which feveral of the inhabitants were destroyed. The Yorkists, however, being at length victorious, the leaders of the Lancastrian party were taken Edward was of a temper too prisoners. jealous and fevere to pardon fuch an infult upon his government; he accordingly haftened to Southampton, and immediately commissioned Tibetot, Earl of Worcester, to sit in judgment on the prisoners. They were tried, condemned, and executed; but the malice of the monarch, not satisfied with that infliction which ought to close the scene of human punishment, permitted their breathless carcases to be impaled, and in this fituation exposed to the public gaze; a mean gratification of impotent revenge, useless as it was unpopular, and what brought a deferved odium upon the king, and Tibetot, who was the minister of his vengeance. *

-Leland

66

66

"

66

46

66

46

66

46

66

^{*} Leland's Collett. v. I. p. 502.

Leland the antiquary, who was commissioned by Henry VIII. to make a perambulation through England, for the purpose of searching the conventual libraries, and preferving other remains of monastic antiquity, took Southampton in his tour; and has left us the following account of its state when he visited the town:

"There be in the fair, and right strong " waulle of New Hampton, eight gates. Over " Barr gate by N. is the Domus Civica, and " under it the town prison. There is a great " fuburb without it, and a great double dyke "welle watered on eche hand without it. "The East-gate is stronge, not so large as "Barre gate, and in its fuburb stands St. " Mary's church. To the South gate joins a " castelet well ordinauncid to be at that quar-"ter of the haven. There is another mean " gate a little more South, called God's house "gate, of an hospital founded by two mer-" chants, joined to it; and not far beyond it "is Water gate, without which is a key. "West gate is stronge, and has a key without

f

1

n

S

0

1-

r,

e

is

d

"it. There are two more gates. The glory of the Castle is in the dungeon, that is both large, fair, and strong, both by work and the street it. There be sive parish churches in the town. Holy Rood church standeth in the chief street, which is one of the fairest streets that is in any town in England, and it is well builded for timber building. There be many fair merchants' houses, and in the South-east part was a college of Grey Friars. Here was also an hospital called God's-house, founded by two merchants, impro-

The castelet above-mentioned by Leland, is standing at present; and as the neighbourhood of Portsmouth, and the respectability of our marine, have long rendered it useless as a fort, it now serves the purposes of a prison for the confinement of debtors. It is said to have been built by Henry VIII.; who presented, at the same time, some ordinance to the town, one piece of which is still to be seen on an adjoining platform.

Among

f

tl

tl

ai

va

re

B

w fo

of

E

^{*} Leland It. v. III. p. 74, et infra.

Among the number of royal visitors who have occasionally honored Southampton with their presence, it reckons Edward VI. In the year 1552, this prince having been attacked both by the measles and small-pox, his conflitution was fo much weakened as to render a fuspension of the toils of state absolutely necessary. By the advice of his physicians, therefore, he made a tour of amusement, through the western and southern parts of his kingdom, attended by a band of three hundred and twenty foldiers; and courtiers and fervants to the amount of four thousand horse. * During this expedition, he kept up a correspondence with a favorite of his, named Barnaby Fitzpatric; a feries of letters, with which an elegant author of the prefent day fome time fince obliged the public.+ In one of these epistles, written from Christchurch, Edward mentions his vifit to Southampton, E which.

1

r

e

e d, n, d-

ıg

^{*} Hayward's Life and Reign of Edward VI., apud Kennet, v. II. p. 323

[†] Letters of Edward VI. to Barnaby Fitzpatric; printed by Mr. Walpole; Strawberry-Hill.

which, from his flight description, appears to have been, at that period, in a flourishing state. "From thence [Portsmouth] we went," says he, "to Titchfield (the Earl of Southampton's "house) and so to Southampton town. The "citizens had bestowed for our coming great cost in painting, repairing, and rampairing "their walls. The towne is handsome, and "for the bignesse of it, as faire houses as be at "London. The citizens made great cheer, "and many of them kept costly tables."*

h

b

The extension of its trade increased, gradually, the magnitude of Southampton and the wealth of its inhabitants. Camden, who wrote in the time of Elizabeth, tells us, it was then famous for the number and beauty of its buildings, its affluent inhabitants, and the resort of numerous merchants. † But as Commerce is a very capricious lady, easily disgusted, and very uncertain in her smiles and frowns, we shall not be surprised to find that, a century after-^{*} Walpole's Edit. p. 10. Fuller's Church-Hift. b. vii. p. 413.

[†] Gough's Edit. Cam. Brit. v. I. p. 116.

afterwards, Southampton prefented a very different appearance; being at that time, (as Gibson, in his edition of Camden, observes) " not in the same flourishing state as formerly, " for having loft its trade, it has loft also most " of its inhabitants; and the great houses of "its merchants are now dropping to the " ground, and only shew its ancient magnifi-"cence."* Since this period, however, trade has again brought its advantages to Southampton, and it is at prefent a town of the first beauty and confideration in the West of England.

* Gibson's Edit. of Camden.

We have the same that he had been the the first of the second of the second

ń

f is d

re ry r-

13.

The same of the same of the same

CHAP. II.

PRESENT STATE OF SOUTHAMPTON.

SOUTHAMPTON enjoys a situation in every respect eligible; it being beautiful, healthy, and commodious for commerce. The Aire, or Itchin, winds to the East of the town; and the Tese, or Auton, to the West. The soil on which it stands is a hard gravel; and the town rising from the river with a gentle ascent, is the cause of its being always dry and clean. It consists of one very broad and handsome street, with several lesser ones running parallel to this, and connected by lanes and allies, diverging at right angles from it. The houses in general, particularly in the upper upper part, are elegant, modern-built mansions. The entrance into Southampton, from the London road, is very striking; the effect being much affisted by the venerable appearance of Bar-gate, a fine remain of antiquity. This majestic portal was built in the reign of Edward III., and, according to the architecture of those days, is both machicolated and embattled. On its North front are portrayed two gigantic figures, one on each fide of the gateway, representing Ascupart, a mighty giant; and Sir Bevis, flyled of Southampton, his redoubted conqueror: a victory preferved in the following couplet:

"Bevis conquer'd Ascupart, and after slew the boare,

" And then he cross'd beyond the seas, to combat with the More."

e

d

e

d

d

1-25

t.

10

er

The High-street, in Leland's time, was supposed to be " the finest street of any town in all England," a pre-eminence which it still maintains, if some few in the capital be excepted. It is three-quarters of a mile in length; but, till lately, was very much obstructed by the Audit and Market house, which are now erected in a more convenient spot; adding, at the same time, greatly to the beauty of the street. The council-chamber is particularly magnificent. A neat conduit now occupies the spot where the old one formerly stood; which, with three others supply the town with excellent water.

E 3

ftrufted

The chief trade that Southampton enjoys at present, is with the Portuguese for wine and fruit, and with the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark. There are feveral floops continually failing to and from these islands, especially the two former; which, besides many goods bought in England by the infular shopkeepers, carry away annually a quantity of unwrought wool, allowed by act of parliament,-to Jersey 4000, to Guernsey 2000, to Alderney 400, to Sark 200 tods, of thirty-two pounds each, which must be fent from, or relanded, and duty paid at this port. In return they import into this kingdom great quantities of coarse worsted hose. Several packets also, previous to our commencing hostilities with France. France, were established from hence, to Havre-de-Grace, and back again, almost daily, for the conveying of passengers, horses, and carriages; by which a communication with France was laid open, and diligences regularly went to Paris, and returned, for the accommodation of travellers; and for those who preferred a passage by water, vessels might be constantly hired to go by way of the Seine.

In this town are many confiderable wine and timber merchants. A carpet-manufactory was established here in 1783, which meets with great encouragement; and the silk-manufactory is carried on to a large extent. The mills for manufacturing blocks, &c. are wonderful pieces of mechanism; they were erected by Mr. Walter Taylor, the present owner, and merit the attention of the curious, as well as of mechanics. The enterprising spirit of many of its inhabitants, continues to enlarge Southampton at every quarter; and, exclusive of the small, tho' neat, buildings in the eastern part, many elegant mansions have lately been erected, at the upper end of the town.

0

n

es

0, th

e,

Charles

Charles I, confirmed all the former charters which had been granted to the town. The corporation confifts of a mayor, a recorder, a sheriff, and two bailiffs; and those only who have ferved any of these offices are commoncouncil men. But the corporation can elect an unlimited number of burgeffes, who are members of it, and vote for the election of the mayor and members of parliament. There are eleven justices of the peace, viz. the mayor for the time being, the bishop of Winchester, the recorder, the last mayor, five senior aldermen, and two burgesses. Several royal burgesses have been elected, and still do honor to this corporation: the late Prince of Wales, in 1750, was admitted burgess by particular defire; as were their late royal highnesses the dukes of York and Cumberland. His present Majesty, with his royal brother, the duke of Gloucester, are also of the number. All who have passed the chair are aldermen. The corporation have feveral officers, a town-clerk, with a genteel falary, four ferjeants at mace, a town-crier, &c.

The mayor and bailiffs have a court for the recovery of small debts. All causes are tried in the Guildhall, where the quarter-fessions are also held; and, except capital crimes, all offenders are here arraigned and heard. By special commission they have cognizance also of capital offences.

This town, which was made a borough by Henry II., and by king John a county in itself, is independent of the lord-lieutenant and sheriff of Hants. The mayor is admiral of the liberties, from South-sea castle to Hurst-castle, and half seas over from Calshot to the Isle of Wight. There are nearly six hundred voters for members in parliament for this town, not only those who pay taxes to church and poor, but out-burgesses also have votes.

Two fairs are annually held in this town, of which Trinity fair, held near Chapel-mill, adjoining to the town, is the principal. It commences on the Saturday noon in Whitsunweek, and holds till Wednesday noon in Trinity-week; but Monday is the chief day of business. A pie-powder court is constantly held, to determine disputes and punish offenders; whence, probably, it was once very reputable. The senior-bailiff presides, having a booth wherein to entertain the corporation &c. during the fair. On the 6th of May, a fair is held Above-Bar, for two days, called St. Mark's. On the Tuesday before Shrove-Tuesday, and Old St. Andrew, were two others formerly held in the market, but they are now discontinued.

Three weekly markets, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, are fully supplied with fine fish, meat, and vegetables. Lobsters from Hamble, brought thither by Jersey and Guernsey vessels, are fold reasonably; whiting and mackarel are caught in the river; and cods, soles, john-dories, and red mullets are frequently brought from Torbay, and fold very cheap. The salmon caught here is excellent, though not so plentiful as formerly, when it was made an article in apprenticing-indentures not to eat salmon more than once a day.

For the accommodation of the public and the benefit of trade, there are three banks, one under the firm of Sadleir, Hilgrove, Lowder, and Durell; a fecond under the firm of Edwards, Harrison, Simpson, and Mattison; and a third under that of Shaw, and Company.

The improvements in the town have, of late, been very considerable. The streets are well lighted and regularly patroled by the watchmen. A pleasant gravel walk in Houndwell field, and the beautiful road at the upper end of the town, lately enclosed with railing, are as much the resort of people of fashion, as the extensive beach which winds along the shore of the river, and affords so many delightful prospects.

CHAP III.

OF ITS RELIGIOUS HOUSES, CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, CHARITIES, &c.

r

f

1:

a p p

fh

ch

THERE was formerly a college of Grey Friars, in the fouth-east part of the town, adjoining to the town wall, between the east and The hospital called God'sfouth-east gates. house, in the fouth part of the town, is of very great antiquity; it was a nunnery at the time that Glocester-square was a convent of friars, and the friars, by a communication between them, used to go to fay mass, and perform other religious duties, in the chapel of God's-The author of the Monasticon tells us it was founded by Roger Hampton, and cites a charter of Edward III, which mentions the names of feveral benefactors, and describes the land land belonging to it; but Leland fays, that Gervasius and Protosius, two brothers who were merchants, (so called probably from the faints' days they were born on) were the founders, living at the time the old town was burnt, on the very fpot where the hospital now stands. An old register at Winchester, containing the names of the abbies, priories, and hospitals, stiles it "Hospitale, sive Domus Dei de Hampton." The old foundations were probably renewed by some Bishop of Winchester, who might add more land to it, and by that means obtain the patronage. But it was afterwards impropriated to Queen's-college, Oxford, on condition that a number of poor scholars of that college should be maintained from a fund of furplufages. They received new privileges from Richard II.; and they had the priory of Sherborne in Hampthire from Edward IV. The fociety at prefent comfilts of a warden, four old men, and as many women, who have each a weekly allowance of two shillings, besides their lodgings and occasional charities.

The French church adjoining, dedicated to St. Julian the bishop, was founded in the year 1567, by patent from Queen Elizabeth, for the Walloon Protestants, who fled from the perfecution of the duke of Alva, and took refuge here; and divine service, according to Calvin's liturgy, was therein performed from that time to the year 1712. On application of the minister and members of this church, the bishop then allowed them to conform to the church of England; according to which, divine fervice continues to be performed in the French tongue only. The congregation chiefly confifts of persons from the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, and masters of vessels from those islands.

The hospital of St. John had a master, and fix boys who were to be instructed in the wool-len manufacture; but when the general work-house was built by act of parliament in 1776, this hospital was fold, and the master and boys removed thither, where the same instructions are continued:

Edward

a

1

ri

ft

Edward VI. founded here a grammar-school, which has since received very valuable improvements. Its present condition, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Mant, rector of All Saints, is very slourishing; whose great diligence, and learning, have contributed much to its reputation. Mr. Ward's academy, where the most useful branches of education are taught, in great persection, as well as the languages, is also highly esteemed. Two ladies' boarding-schools, by Miss Barnouin and Mrs. Holworthy are also in high repute.

A charity-school, for the education of thirty boys in reading, writing, and navigation, was set on foot in the year 1713, by a subscription of 801. per annum. After several years, this was discontinued; but in 1760 another was established, in pursuance of the will of Richard Taunton, Esq., late alderman of this town, to qualify twenty boys for going to sea. He gave the bulk of a very large estate to charitable uses, but this was set aside, on the statute of mortmain, by the court of chancery; and his personal estate only, amounting to be-

f

S

d

15

15 rd

F 2

tween

tween five and fix thousand pounds, came to the trustees for the endowment of the faid school: but the court of chancery, in 1768, reduced the number of boys to ten; and 40l. per annum, part of the interest of his personal effate, was appropriated to the reward of maid-fervants, on their marriage. A certificate from their mistress or master, of their faithful servitude for at least three years, in a reputable family, is required. The boys were formerly obliged to go to fea, but are now at liberty to choose any mechanical trade, for which five pounds are allowed as an apprentice-fee; but any boy who prefers the feafervice, is to be instructed in navigation, with books and instruments, and to have extraclothing, and on producing a certificate of his faithful servitude, is entitled to five guineas.

Nor must we here omit to mention the neat and commodious structure on the right, at the entrance of the town, erected from the accumulation of a legacy left by Robert Thorner, Esq., of Baddesley; and thence called 'Thorner's Charity.' Mr. Thorner was a different ;

he

fi

he died in 1690, and left great sums to charitable purposes; of which the following are the principal: to the poor children in the towns of Southampton, Salisbury, Dorchester, and parish of Litton; five pounds towards their apprenticeship, and another five pounds at the expiration of the same. After payment of a legacy of five hundred pounds to Havord college in New England, repairing the estates, &c., the overplus has, during the term of one hundred years, accumulated to a fum fufficient for erecting this building, which is to accommodate eighteen widows, who are to be allowed two shillings a week each. The building is to be increased from time to time, as the money shall arise from the estates.

The Sunday - schools too, established in 1786, deserve a place here, as they are observed to answer so well the purpose of their institution; that of instilling the principles of religion into the children of the poor. They are supported by the voluntary donations and subscriptions of the inhabitants. The children are supplied with proper books; and rewards, proportioned to their respective merits, occasionally allotted them. They are conducted to church, every Sunday, by their masters and mistresses, to hear divine service. By the donations of several beneficent ladies, added to the surplus-money of the Sunday-schools, a school of industry is instituted for teaching twenty-sive girls reading, needle work, &c. These girls are selected from the Sunday-school, and clothed uniformly.

(

a

C

ir

I

of

pa

There were in Southampton fix parish-churches, viz. Holy Rhood, St. Michael, All Saints, St. Lawrence, St. John and St. Mary: But St. John and St. Lawrence were united in the reign of King Charles II., and the former was taken down. The mayor and corporation attend divine service at Holy Rhood, and St. Lawrence; the former of which has a fine organ, and several handsome monuments; one of which by Rysbrack, sacred to the memory of Miss Stanley, sister to the late member of that name for this town, deserves particular attention. Thompson's Summer (v. 564 to 584) has immortalized her name.

Another, facred to the memory of Anne, daughter of Philip Hobby, Efq., of Neathabbey, in Glamorganshire, and relict of W. Stanley Efq., of Paultons. A neat monument erected by Dr. Perkins, is to be feen here; as well as an elegant one in memory of Charles D'Aussy Efq.

Holy Rhood church is a vicarage belonging to Queen's-college, Oxford; to which are annexed fome private legacies, the wardenship of God's-house, and the stewardship of the college-lands, amounting in all to about 2001. per The other churches (St. Mary's excepted) are in the king's gift. St. Michael's has a fine, flender, octagonal spire, which greatly adds to the beauty of many prospects, particularly from the north and north-west; it was erected for a mark or guide to ships entering the port. Here is also a good ring of bells. In this church the mayor is always fworn into his office. Wriothesley, Lord High Chancellor of England in the time of Henry VIII., who passed sentence on Anna Bullen, lies interred in the north chancel. The figure, which is in a reclining posture, is almost entire; but the monument and inscription are defaced.

The old church of All Saints, was lately pulled down, and a new one, on an elegant plan, and larger fite, is now erecting.

The church of St. Mary having been many years ago destroyed by fire, was rebuilt in the modern taste. It is in the gift of the bishop of Winchester; Dr Ogle, Dean of Winchester, is the present incumbent. William of Wickham bequeathed to this church, "annum, par vestimentorum, cum chalice." The living is estimated at 1000l. per annum: the value of the other churches, except Holy-Rhood, is but small, though the Queen's bounty has been procured for them. All the parishes are incorporated by act of parliament, and in 1776, a general work-house was built near St Mary's:

fi

tl

tl

0 ti fe

CHAP IV.

OF ITS MINERAL WATERS, AIR, SEA-BATHING, AMUSEMENTS, &c.

As fea-bathing and the mineral waters have proved, among other things, a fuccessful means of attracting people of rank to Southampton, we shall proceed to give an account of them; first noticing the mineral water, at the bottom of Orchard-street, without Bar-gate. It is thought to possess, without Bar-gate. It is thought to possess, without Bar-gate as that of Tunbridge. It is an effectual de-obstruent, which successfully opens obstructions of every fort; and has done astonishing service in tedious and obstinate agues, black and yellow jaundice, schirrhus of the spleen, as well as in the scurvy, green sickness, and even paralytic paralytic diforders. As it greatly corroborates the folids, it is of much use in weak and hectic habits; and extinguishes inward inflammations, without hurting the stomach by its coolness. Dr. Rowzee, in his treatise on chalybeate water, affirms that it is the best remedy against barrenness. A middle-sized tumbler or rummer is sufficient for a dose, which should be repeated rather than enlarged.

About three hundred yards N. E. from the Bar, in a field called Houndwell, are two fprings; that towards the North is only a fpring of fresh water, while the other on the south, is efficacious in disorders of the eyes. At the upper end of the same field is a spring of excellent water, which, till lately, had been choked with filth, when, at the expence chiefly of G. N. Vincent Esq. a gentleman who lately resided in Southampton, it was cleansed, and a neat font was erected. It is called Old Friars' Spring.

In speaking of the air, so essential both to the preservation and recovery of health, it is beyond beyond contradiction, that Southampton and its environs enjoy a most pure and salubrious atmosphere. Few parts of the kingdom possess this very valuable blessing in so eminent a degree; nor do we strain a compliment in pronouncing this town, the Montpelier of England. The numerous instances of longevity observable here, demonstrably prove what we have afferted.

Bathing has generally been attended with the best effects. Relaxation is the common cause of complaints incident to the higher order of persons in England; and except in the case of unsound viscera, the cold-bath greatly braces the solids, and accelerates the blood's motion. Even corpulency, if proper evacuations are first attended to, is no impediment to its use; and precautions, in the latter case, might be pointed out to guard against any evil effects.

Dr. Lee and Dr. Russel have shewn the great utility of sea-bathing, in the scurvy, and even leprosy; as well as in rheumatic and relaxed relaxed habits; and Dr. Hales observes, that cold is never taken by persons bathing in the fea, from putting on their clothes while their bodies are wet. He recommends as a fubflitute, to diffolve five ounces and an half of bay falt, in a gallon of water; and in hot feafons, or hot climates, to wet the body with this mixture, and put on the clothes immediately. Though this has not the strength and good qualities of fea-water, its use may be productive of some falutary effects. To which we shall only add, (tho' last, not least esteemed) the testimony of the late Dr. Speed, of this town, whose experiments fully explode the vulgar error of the different power of feawater here, and at the fouth fide of the Isle of Wight; but we must refer our readers to his "Commentary on Sea-water," [which may be had of the publisher of this guide, price 6d.

Near the west quay is a range of convenient baths for ladies and gentlemen to bathe in, at all times, and in any depth of water. There is also a hot bath, for those to whom this mode of bathing may be recommended. The fe-

parate

parate apartments, for ladies and gentlemen, are supplied with every thing that is necessary; and the whole is laid out in a judicious and elegant manner.

The public rooms are also situated near the west quay, and command a delightful prospect of the water and New Forest, &c. The proprietor, Mr. Martin, has, at a vast expence, sitted them up in the most elegant taste. The ball-room is very spacious, decorated with magnificent pier-glasses; and the music is with great judgment disposed in the centre. Punctilios in dress are dispensed with as much as possible, and the following regulations must be complied with:

JULY 2d, 1794.

THAT the rooms be opened every day in the week, Sundays excepted.

it it e

e te

TT.

That there be a ball on Tuesday nights, to which subscribers are to pay ten shillings and sixpence for the season.

G

III.

That non-subscribers to the Tuesdays' balls pay five shillings each, tea included.

IV

That on Thursday and Saturday nights the rooms be opened for card-assemblies and promenade.

v.

That the general admission to the rooms be five shillings to subscribers for the season, Tuesday nights exclusive.

VI.

That non-fubscribers on the general admission nights pay one shilling each.

N. B. Children of all ages are subject to the above regulations.

The Master of the Ceremonies respectfully requests that non-subscribers on the general admission nights will afford him an early opportunity, on their entrance to the rooms, of being presented to them, that he may be enabled to shew them that attention it is so much his wish to observe.

Extract from the proceedings of the committee, Jan. 28, 1786:

"That Mr. Haynes being appointed Master of the Ceremonies, shall be supported in the execution of his office by all the subscribers at large; and any misbehaviour shewn to him, shall be considered as done to the whole company."

A. G. HAYNES, M. C.

PRICES OF CARDS.

3. 1	·d:
Two packs for Whist, Quadrille, Cribbage, Casino, and all games not here specified, 8	6
Ditto one pack, 6	0
Commerce and Vingt-et-un, 9	0
Loo, 8	6
If more than eight play, each, 1	0
Ipttery,	6
After the first packs, at any game, per pack, 3	6

1

e o

Et.

G 2

Fuly.

July 18, 1794.

as ci

da

the

no

da

Th

The Master of the Ceremonies respectfully informs the company, that, as the general admission to the rooms has been lowered to a price inadequate to desray the expence of the music on Thursdays and Saturdays, a collection of two shillings each will be required from gentlemen who dance on those nights.

As this regulation is agreeable to a custom formerly adopted at these rooms, the Master of the Ceremonies hopes it will meet with the general concurrence and approbation of the company.

A. G. HAYNES, M. C.

July 24, 1794.

IT being absolutely necessary in all polite assemblies to establish some regulations, without which no order or decorum can be preferved—the company are respectfully requested to comply with the following:

I.

That no precedence take place at these rooms, after the balls are begun.

II.

That the Tuesdays' balls shall begin as soon as possible after eight o'clock, and finish precisely at twelve o'clock.

III.

That the dancing on Thursdays and Saturdays finish precisely at eleven o'clock.

IV.

That ladies and gentlemen who dance down a country-dance, shall not quit their places till the dance is finished, unless they mean to dance no more that night.

v.

That after a lady has called a dance, and danced it down, her place in the next dance is at the bottom.

The prevailing custom of ladies allowing their acquaintance to stand above them in the set, having been the origin of much dispute, and a material interruption to the dance, the Master of the Ceremonies would think himself highly blameable to suffer it to continue:——It is his intention to be extremely attentive to prevent it in suture.

VI.

That gentlemen are not to appear at the rooms in boots.

VII.

That no tea-table be carried into the cardroom, on ball-nights.

As it is the wish of the Master of the Ceremonies that all improper company should be kept from these rooms, he respectfully requests that all strangers, as well ladies as gentlemen, to whom he has not the honor to be personally known, will offer him some occasion of being presented to them, to enable him to shew that attention and respect to every individual resorting to this place, which he will be ever studious to observe.

A. G. HAYNES, M. C.

There is likewise a winter-assembly at the Dolphins' Inn, once a fortnight, on Tuesdays, commencing in the latter end of October, and ending in the beginning of May. The rules are as follow:

ı.

Each affembly to begin at feven, and end at eleven o'clock, even in the middle of a dance.

II.

No lady or gentleman to fit down in the middle of a dance, unless they mean to dance no more.

III.

e

IS

o

to nd

is to he ys,

nd

les

1.

All furplus of money arising from the subfcription to be appropriated for the purpose of the assembly only.

IV.

Each subscriber to pay 7s. 6d. for the season, and non-subscribers 3s. each night of admission.

v.

Each lady and gentleman to pay 6d. for tea, on admission.

VI.

Every card-table, with two packs of cards, to pay 8s. 6d.; and a fingle pack for a round table, 6s.

A. G. HAYNES, M. C.

The Play-house is on the plan of that of Covent Garden, and is capable of admitting a large audience; where all new plays, &c. are performed by one of the best companies of country comedians, three times a week during the season.

For the amusement of gentlemen there are also billiard-tables and a fives'-court.

There is a fociety of archers here; it was instituted in the year 1789, under the patronage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Glocester. They wear an elegant uniform, and three times a year shoot for prize-medals. They are stiled 'Royal Southampton Archers'.

fi

T

n

CHAP. V.

OF THE MONUMENTS OF ANTIQUITY, IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF SOUTHAMPTON.

CLAUSENTUM, ST. DIONYSIUS'S PRIORY, AND NETLEY ABBEY.

IN the town of Southampton, as we have before observed, are no remains of Roman antiquity; but at no great distance from its suburbs, on the opposite side of the Itchen, we meet with the site of an ancient Roman station. The one I allude to was Clausentum. The Itinerary of Antoninus makes the following mention of it:

*ITER VII.

Iter a Regno Londinio, M. P. XCVI; fic, Clausento, M. P. XX. Venta Belgarum, M. P. X. Calleva Atrebatum, M. P. XXII. Pontibus, M. P. XXII.

Londinio, M. P. XXII.

The situation of this station has been a matter of dispute among antiquaries, nor was it exactly settled, till the year before last, when such reasons were adduced for fixing it at Bittern, in a differtation then published, as to render any surther doubt on the subject super-sluous. †

The

"

66

66

* Horfley's Brit. Rom. p. 381;

Journey the feventh.

Journey from Ringwood to London, 96 r	niles, thus,
To Clausentum, (Bittern,)	20 miles.
To Venta Belgarum, (Winchester,)	10 ditto.
To Calleva Atrebatum, (Farnham,)	22 ditto.
To Pontes, (near Old Windsor,)	22 ditto.
To Londinium, (London,)	22 ditte.

⁺ See Warner's "Attempt to ascertain the Situation of the Ancient Clausentum." 4to. Blamire, 1792, price 2s. Sold by T. Baker, Southampton.

The author of this little tract urges the following arguments in support of his hypothesis:

"Mr. Camden," fays he, "who, perhaps, indulges rather too much in etymological conjecture, places this station in the suburbs of the present Southampton, and derives its name from the circumstances of its situation." 'Clausentum,' according to him, signifies, in British, the port Entum; for I have learnt that claudh implies the same among the Britons that xuros rupus did among the Greeks—that is, an haven made by the casting up of banks.'

n

ıt

0

r-

le

"In this supposition Camden has been followed by all subsequent antiquarians; and, amongst the rest, by the judicious Horsley, who concurs in fixing Clausentum at Old Southampton."

"There are certain reasons, however, which "may induce us to dissent from the opinion of these learned men. We will enumerate them,

"them, and then offer a few observations to

" shew the probability of Bittern-farm oc" cupying the fite of this old station."

"In the first place, it does not feem that "much attention ought to be paid to Mr.

" Camden's etymology of the name, Clau-

" fentum; fince it is far from being supported

" by a good foundation. For as, by his own "account, this station stood upon the Itchen,

" it would, unquestionably, have been named

" after that river, instead of the Anton, had

" this local circumstance given it any part of " its appellation. Besides, had it been situated

" fo near the fea as Southampton is, would it

" not have been numbered among the stations

" which were placed under the jurisdiction of " the Comes littoris Saxonici per Britanniam-

"the governor who was appointed to guard

"the coasts which lay opposite to France? *

No

[&]quot;* Previous to the departure of the Romans from Britain, the Saxons, and other barbarous tribes from the continent, made occasional descents on this country. One of the last acts of the Romans was to build a number of forts along the southern and eastern coasts to repel the invaders, and protect the maritime country. Gildas apud Galei Scriptores, c. 14."

" No notice, however, of Claufentum, occurs " in the fifty-fecond chapter of the Notitia, " which details the various places and officers " under the control of the Count of the Saxon " shore. * Add to this, no trace of Roman " architecture, no inscriptions, nor even coins, " have been found at Southampton; a strong " negative proof that it was never known to the "Romans—a proof which is confirmed by the "distance between Clausentum and Venta "Belgarum (or Winchester), as given us by "the Itinerary, which can never, by any " mode of computation, be made to agree with " the thirteen miles we at prefent reckon from "the last - mentioned place to Southamp-" ton."

1

n

d

d

of

d

it

of

rd

No

in,

laft

ong and rip"On the other hand, if we suppose Bitternfarm to have been the place pointed out by Antoninus under the name Clausentum, all the difficulties just mentioned vanish in a moment. Its situation is such as Roman prudence might be supposed to have pitched H "upon

^{*} Horsley's Brit. Rom. p. 476.

"upon for a military station.* Numerous traces still remain of Roman labor. Its distances from Ringwood and Winchester agree exactly with the mensuration of Antonine. Remains of military ways pointing towards it, are still to be met with, and many Roman coins have been, at various times, discovered on the spot."

"But we will be more particular on each of these heads, and, in the first place, consider the situation of Bittern."

"The river Itchen discharges itself into the Trisanton, or (as it is now called) South"ampton Water, about eight miles from its "mouth; after having observed, from its fource, a direction nearly south-west. Its "waters meander, in a very agreeable manner, "for several miles, before they enter this "estuary; forming many picturesque sweeps, "and various peninsulas, or juttings of the "land.

^{*&}quot; A copious stream of water always weighed with the "Romans, in the choice of their ground for camps and stations. Hyginus, edit. Stepb. Amsterdam, 1660."

" land. In one of these capricious windings, "three miles before it loses itself in the "Trifanton, a fingular peninfula is formed, " about half a mile in circumference, now " denominated Bittern-farm. Here, then, I " conceive the ancient Clausentum to have "been placed; and perhaps we cannot pitch "upon a fpot better calculated for the pur-" poses of a military station. Indeed, I am " inclined to look for the very origin of the " name itself, (if I may be allowed to sport for " a moment in the wilds of etymological con-"jecture,) in this peculiar fituation. From the " various windings of the Itchen, Bittern, " though fo near its mouth, has the appearance " of being perfectly landlocked. The Romans, " as well as almost all other nations, frequently "bestowed on places, appellations derived "from fome of those local circumstances, "which diftinguish so universally one spot " from another. The fingularity of Bittern-" point would offer an obvious one: clausus, " shut up," and intus, " within," (or in other " words, landlocked) give us a precise idea of " the fituation and appearance of this penin-" fula. H 2

f

e its ts ts

is os,

he id.

the and

"fula. Familiar use would soon introduce "the contraction "Claus-int," or "Claus-ent," and the frequent Roman termination, "um" being added, affords us, without any fan"tastic, or strained etymology, the perfect "name, Clausentum."

"We can plainly trace the vestiges of Roman labor at Bittern. A fosse, which divides the point whereon the castellum stood, from the main land; and part of a vallum, which in its original state, before it was depressed by time and weather, must have been of great magnitude, appear to me to have been formed by that people. Fragments of Roman bricks also, are still visible among the rubbish of a decayed wall on the eastern side."

"Inclosures, and agriculture, which over"turn such ancient ways and earth-works as "lie within the reach of cultivation, have "destroyed almost all traces of the military
"roads which led from Regnum, and Venta
"Belgarum, to the place in question; but the "distances between these respective places
"tally

66

66

66

" tally fo nicely with those mentioned in the " Itinerary of Antoninus, as to afford another " strong argument in favor of the fact I wish

" to establish."

"The discovery of Roman coins, in any "particular place, is generally esteemed a "proof of the presence of that people at "the fpot. A long feries of them has been, " at different times, dug up at Bittern; among "which appear those of Claudius, Sabinus, " Antoninus, Commodus, Lucilla, Alexander " Severus, Constantius, Constans, Caraufius, " Valentinianus, and Valens."

"Such are the arguments," observes Mr. Warner, "I have to offer in support of my af-" fertion, that Claufentum stood on the pen-"infula which is now called Bittern-farm. "Certain it is, from the Itinerary of An-"toninus, there was a station of this name, " fomewhere in the neighbourhood of South-" ampton; and as no other place thereabouts, "but Bittern, produces marks of Roman " antiquity, we may, without hefitation, fix "Claufentum there."*

e

y

a

e

S

y

The

^{*} Attempt to ascertain, &c. chap. 2.

The time when Clausentum became a station, has also been a subject of dispute, but Mr. Warner having examined the arguments on all sides, and urged his reasons for the opinion he entertains, pronounces it to have been formed under the direction of Vespasian, during the period of his continuance in the southern parts of Britain. *

Some time in the thirteenth century, Bittern-farm became attached to the fee of Winchester, and one of its bishops built, on the site of the old station, (and probably with part of the materials of the castellum,) a fort, or house of defence. Of this erection, I apprehend, the old stone building, now converted into a barn, may be deemed a portion: for, in the upper part of the wall, next the ditch, are loop-holes to permit the discharge of arrows by those within the building; and in the barn are plain vestiges of a floor, at such an height that men standing upon it might conveniently shoot thro' the loop-holes above-mentioned. At the fouth end of this barn, and annexed to it, are the remains of a stone gateway; which consisted of two arches, one within the other, and appears to have been the entrance into the fort. It is evident there was a room originally over this portal, for at the southern extremity of the barn, a door-case may be discovered, leading from the upper apartment to the top of the gateway. There are many other remains, but in such a state of ruin, that it would be difficult to point out their original designation.

On the opposite side of the river Itchen, in a southern direction, is Northam, a place which, Bishop Gibson mentions, in his additions to Camden, was, before his time, converted into a dock for building men of war. Here, he tells us, a gold coin had been then lately found; from whence we may conclude that it had some connection with the station Clausentum; especially as the channel, at this spot, runs so close under the shore of Northam, that ships could not pass the spot without being considerably annoyed, if it had been in possession of an enemy.

t

0

t,

Immediately

Immediately facing Bittern, on the west side, is a hill, called Bevois-hill, from a legendary tradition, that Sir Bevois, the famous knight of Southampton, lies buried under it. It now makes part of the gardens formed by the late Lord Peterborough. As impressions of the beauty, or deformity, of an object, are generally made from a first view, it was the judicious rule of this nobleman, not to fuffer strangers to fee his pleasure-grounds, unless the river (which makes a capital part of the profpect) were at its height. The fpot which the fummer-house now occupies, was a barrow; and, in digging to form the foundations of this building, a human skeleton was discovered, confifting of bones far beyond the common fize. The compass of the foundation, however, extending no higher than the middle of the thigh-bone, no fearch was made for the remainder of this curiofity. Whether Bevoishill had any connection with Bittern, in ancient days, cannot now be afcertained; though, I confess, from its situation, I should apprehend it might be the castrum exploratorum, or fcout-watch to the station; Roman coins coins having been discovered on the spot, and the river, at this place, fordable, about a century and half ago. If this be thought probable, the station Clausentum will appear to have comprehended, the castellum, or chief fort, at Bittern; the lesser fort, at Northam; and the exploratory camp, just mentioned, at Bevois-hill.

Bevois-mount, or Padwell, as it is sometimes called, now belongs to Edward Horne Esq. Its situation is rather beautiful than grand, and affords much gratification to the picturesque as well as antiquarian eye.

The remains of St. Dionysius's priory form a very pleasing object from Bittern-farm. They stand at the distance of two miles from Southampton, on the western side of the river Itchen. Dugdale informs us this religious house was founded by Henry I., for a society of black canons, about the year 1124; who granted, by his charter, to God and the canons of St. Dionysius, for the good of his own soul, &c., that parcel of his land lying between Portafrada

Portafrada, and the river of Hystia, (Itchen) which used to bring in eleven shillings and six deniers; and also that part of his lands of Portafrada, lying near the sea, in the east part of Hampton, which used to bring in the annual rent of forty-one shillings and six deniers.

This donation, and others made by Robert de Limeseia, were confirmed by King Stephen. To which Henry II. added the chapels of St. Michael, of the Holy Cross, of St. Lawrence, and of All Saints, near the town of Hampton.

King Richard I. was a great benefactor to this priory; infomuch that Leland names him as one of the founders. * He bestowed on it, 'Kingsland, and the wood called Porteswarde, with all its appurtenances, in see, and perpetual alms;' a mode of donation that exempted the property from taxes and impositions of every kind.

A charter

t

r

a t.

n

C

t

r

1

^{*} Leland's Collettanea, v. I. p. 69. It was customary, formerly, to confer the title of founders, on those who contributed largely to these religious houses. Tanner's Preface to his Notitia Monast.

A charter of Edward III, entitles the canons of this house to a pipe of red prisage wine, for the celebration of mass, to be delivered to them at Southampton, by the King's butler there; a grant that was released to the corporation (at the same time with several others of a similar nature), by letters patent of James I. in the sixth year of his reign.*

These canons enjoyed also divers grants of lands, and annual payments in money, from private persons, so that, at the dissolution, their revenues amounted to 91l. 9s., according to Speed; a full sufficiency, at that time, for nine canons and a prior, which the house then consisted of.

Brown Willis, an indefatigable pioneer in the mine of ecclefiastical antiquities, has refcued from oblivion the following list of the priors of St. Dionysius.

Gerard. Ruckland, 1257. Nicholas, 1263. Richard de Chacomb, elected, 1294. Will.

^{*} Warner's Topographical Remarks on Hampshire, v. I. p. 265, Note.

Will. de Warham, el. 1328. Richard, 1373. John Stanford, el. 1390. John Kyal, el. 1307. Thomas Winchester, el. 1412. Thomas Arnwood, el. 1435. William Norman, el. 1456. Thomas Roby, el. 1462. John Haft, el. 1492. William May, el. 1508; who prefided till the diffolution of the house.

Mr. Grose, in the second volume of his antiquities, has an engraving of the only remaining part of the priory, which appears to be the western end of its place of worship.

Proceeding in a fouthern direction, from Bittern, about four miles, we reach the ruins of Netley-abbey, on the eastern bank of Southampton river. I believe that few people, who think at all, can visit the remains of these ancient religious fabrics, without experiencing a fensation, which, as it arises from a combination of different emotions, is hardly to be There is a reverential awe naturally inspired by the recollection of the pious purpofes to which these holy edifices were originally applied. The masses of ruins too, which fe

na

th

gr of which lie scattered on all sides, strongly impress the mind with a conviction of the instability and vanity of all human works; and the reflection that we are treading over ground, peopled with the remains of our fellowcreatures, who were once young and vigorous like ourselves, inspires the awful idea of our own mortality----that we, ere long must be like them, filent, neglected, and forgotten. The fituation also of monastic ruins, is generally well calculated to promote a pleafing melancholy, it being that of gloom and feclusion; while the mode of architecture obferved in them, (a style that is now entirely out of date) gives a new and unufual turn to our It is from these causes, that people who are any ways pleafed with intellectual recreation, receive fo much fatisfaction in contemplating the ruins of religious and monastic edifices.

Among these precious remains of antiquity, there are none better calculated to administer gratification to the reslecting mind, than those of Netley Abbey. Their situation is extremely tremely beautiful. A gently-fwelling hill arises with an easy ascent from the river; on the brow of which the remains of this religious house are seated; but so much hidden by the luxuriant wood-scenery about them, as scarcely to be discovered till they are nearly approached. The field on which they stand, commands several views of the river slowing beneath it—equally beautiful, but various according to the spot from whence they are seen. The profusion of ivy which covers the mouldering walls; the different shrubs and trees that now occupy the area of the church, where repose

"Names once known, now dubious or forgot."

The fragments of architecture lying around in diforderly ruin; and the elegance of those few parts which have yet escaped entire destruction, combine to form a scene, awful, and interesting, in the highest degree;—a scene that contemplation cannot leave without reluctance: where the pensive man might covet, without being thought guilty of affectation, to pass the concluding stages of existence—

" There

re

m ac

of

in

of or

Vi

San

No.

"There let time's creeping winter shed

"His hoary fnow around my head;

" And while I feel, by fast degrees,

" My fluggard blood wax chill and freeze,

"Let thought unveil to my fix'd eye,

" The scenes of deep eternity;

V

-

d ie eet, to ere

" Till, life dissolving at the view,

" I wake, and find the vision true.

But few particulars can be gathered of the history of Netley Abbey. Authors differ respecting its founder. Tanner, in his 'Notitia Monastica' gives that title to Henry III.; who, he tells us, took a certain number of monks from the abbey of Beaulieu, and placed them at Netley, about the year 1239. This account seems to be corroborated by a charter of the same monarch, to the new monastery; in which he expressly calls himself the founder of it.* The monks were of the Cistertian order, and the house itself dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Edward. The following is the list of such of its abbots whose names have been handed down to us:

2

*" Sciatis nos, &c., concessisse, &c., Deo, et ecclesiæ Sanctæ Mariæ, de loco Sancti Edwardi quam nos fundavimus, &c." Vide Warner's Topographical Remarks; Appendix, No. XIV. p. 34.

Robert, A. D. 1255. Walter, 1290. Henry de Inglesham, 1371. John Stelhard, 1374. Philip de Cornhampton, 1387. John de Gloucester. Richard Middleton, 1400. Thomas, 1527.*

At the diffolution there were twelve monks and an abbot here, whose revenues, according to Speed, amounted to 160l. 2s. 94d.

The site of Netley Abbey, together with all the buildings, were granted by Henry VIII., in the twenty-eighth year of his reign, to Sir William Paulet. They became the property and residence, afterwards, of the Earl of Hertford, and since then, were inhabited, as report says, by an earl of Huntingdon. The late Mr. Dummer purchased the whole of Henry Clift, esq.; and Mr. Dance enjoys the property at present, having married the relict of Mr. Dummer. It is fortunate for the lovers

* Topog. Remarks, v. I. p. 294.

di ex

th

of

aı

pı

m

pr

his otl

wh fol

as

qu

lovers of antiquities that these beautiful ruins are now in the possession of a gentleman, whose regard for the arts, elegant taste, and practical as well as theoretic skill in picturesque matters, ensure to the public every care in the preservation of them.

Bigotry, avarice, and ignorance have, at different periods, waged war with this noble example of Gothic architecture; infomuch that but a fmall part, comparatively speaking, of the original fabric, remains. Late defectations, indeed, have been prevented by the influence of superstition; an almost folitary instance of the good effects of this miserable principle. Brown Willis relates the story in his account of mitred abbies; but, like all other tellers of stories, has deviated somewhat from the truth in his recital. The real facts as detailed by the family of the principal, which now reside at Southampton, were as follows:

When Netley Abbey belonged to the Marquis of Huntingdon, Mr. Walter Taylor of I 3 South-

Southton, contracted with this nobleman, for the purchase of so much of its materials as he could carry away in a certain space of time. Some of his relations confidered the bargain as facrilegious; and urged him not to be inflrumental in destroying an edifice which had been consecrated to the worship of the Deity. Their remonstrances had some effect, and tho' they were not of fufficient force to induce him to give up the prospect of gain which the contract held out, yet they dwelt fo much on his mind as to occasion a dream one night, that the arch key-stone of the east window fell from its fituation, and fractured his skull. He communicated the portentous dream to a Mr. Watts (father of the celebrated Dr. Isaac Watts), who advised him to be by no means perfonally concerned in the demolition of the church. Taylor, however, fcorning, as is too often the cafe, the advice he had folicited, proceeded in the work of devastation: and in an exertion to tear down a board from the window, loofened the fatal stone, which fell upon his head, and produced a fracture. The wound was not, at first, deemed to be mortal; but but the instrument of the surgeon unhappily slipped, in the operation of extracting a splinter, entered the brain, and caused immediate death.

The parts of Netley Abbey that remain, are, the walls of the chapel (which appears to have been cruciform) the kitchen, and refectory. They are in a fad state of ruin, but display such elegancies of architecture as convince us it must have been, originally, eminently beautiful.

About one hundred yards to the north of these remains stands a castle in a dilapidated state, which appears to have been erected by Henry VIII. at the time of his building Cowes and Hurst castles. There is nothing particular in its construction.

randavis Artista Attend

CHAP. VI.

NEW FOREST.

IT would be an unpardonable defect in a work of this kind, (professing to introduce strangers to every thing worth their attention in a particular district,) were we to omit noticing New Forest, which lies in the neighbourhood of Southampton, and well deserves a few observations. This large and variegated district contains no less than 92,365 superficial acres. Previous, however, to the disafforestations by Henry III., its limits were still more extensive, the length being nearly thirty-four miles, from the south-east to the north-west, and the circumference upwards of ninety miles.

It has been the general opinion for many ages, suggested first by the monkish writers and adopted from them by later historians, that this wide tract of country was converted into forest by William the Conqueror; who, in defiance of every obligation, moral, religious, and political, exterminated the inhabitants at that time residing in it, overturned their dwellings, destroyed their implements of hufbandry, and defecrated twenty-two (or according to fome authors, fifty-two) motherchurches, which then stood on the spot. His motive for this barbarous proceeding, we are told, was an ungovernable passion for the chace, and an idea, that the fouth-western corner of Hampshire was particularly well fituated for the purpose of gratifying it: The improbability of this story (which originated in monkish malice) seems sufficiently obvious, at the first glance; fince we cannot persuade ourfelves that a prince of William's political fagacity, would adopt a measure of which the disadvantages were many, certain, and general; the advantages, few, paltry, and personal. Such, however, is the universal practice of historians.

historians, to receive and adopt the details of their predecessors, without thoroughly sifting them, or weighing their probability, that we find every annalist and chronicler from the eleventh century to modern times, delivering this account of William's merciless afforestation. Hume himself seems to have dropped his usual caution and penetration, when, on the authority of Malmsbury and Henry of Huntingdon, he tells us, that the Conqueror, for the purpose of making a new forest, " laid waste the country in Hampshire for an extent of thirty miles, expelled the inhabitants from their houses, seized their property, even demolished churches and convents, and made the fufferers no compensation for the injury." And Pope, who, indeed, may plead the licentia poetarum, makes William guilty of fad hoftilities against the arts, as well as against his defenceless subjects; for he speaks of columns and temples being destroyed on the occasion; elegancies of architecture which it would have been difficult to discover in the Anglo-Saxon times.

"The fields are ravish'd from th'industrious swains,

"From men their cities, and from gods their fanes;

" The levell'd towns with weeds lie cover'd o'er;

"The hollow winds thro' naked temples roar;

"'Round broken columns clasping ivy twin'd;

"O'er heaps of ruin stalk'd the stately kind;

"The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires;

"And favage howlings fill the facred choirs."*

A great deal of light, however, has of late been thrown on the subject of William's afforestation, both by Mr. Gough, in his elaborate edition of Camden, and Mr. Warner, in his 'Topographical Remarks'; the latter of which gentlemen, after having examined all that has been said, or written, on the subject, sums up his differtation with the following conclusions:

First. "That in early times, previous to the "reign of William, the tract of country now "denominated New Forest, was a sterile and "woody district, occupied by some of the "lower ^{*} Windfor Forest, 1. 65.

"lower ranks of fociety; for the most part " uncultivated, but with a few places, here " and there, which were in the rude tillage of "the age." Secondly, "That William being " passionately fond of hunting, and wishing to " extend the scenes of his favorite amusement, " fixed on this corner of Hampshire, as a spot " proper for his purpose, and accordingly con-" verted a large proportion of it into forest." But, thirdly, "That the afforestation was made "without much injury to the fubject, or " offence to religion; the scantiness of its " population precluding the one; and the cir-" cumftances of the times, and state of that " part of the kingdom, forbidding us to believe "there could be many places of worship "existing there, the desecration of which " might have fcandalized the other." *

This general prejudice against the Conqueror's character, however, has not been a little strengthened by certain accidents which happened in the New Forest, after its formation, to three of his relations;—accidents that super-

P

^{*} Topographical Remarks, vol. I. p. 196.

fuperstition ascribed to the indignation of the Deity, for the profanation of his temples; without confidering they were the natural confequences of constant indulgence in a sport, from its nature, attended with hazard and danger. Richard, an elder brother of William's; Richard, his nephew, natural fon to Duke Robert; and William Rufus, his own fon, and immediate fuccessor, all perished within the confines of New Forest. This last victim to his sports was accidentally flain by Sir Walter Tyrrel, a Norman who accompanied him in the chace. A flag passing by, the knight discharged his arrow at him, but the weapon glancing against a tree, took a direction contrary to the one intended, and pierced the monarch through the heart. Tyrrel, on feeing William fall, immediately efcaped into Normandy. The body, however, was shortly after found by a peasant, who threw it into his cart, and conveyed it to Winchester, where a plain tomb is still pointed out, as covering its remains. Tradition informs us, that the name of the person who paid this attention to the deceafed tyrant was Purkefs: K

Purkefs; the descendants of whom still reside near the spot where the accident occurred. It further asserts, that part of the cart on which the body was placed, existed till within these few years, when the only remaining wheel was committed by wanton malice to the slames. The spot where Rusus sell is a beautiful and picturesque piece of forest-scenery, at a place called Canterton, near Stony-Cross; where is a triangular stone, with an inscription detailing the circumstances of his death.

New Forest is divided into nine bailiwicks, which comprise fourteen walks, as follow:

BAILIWICKS. WALKS. Burley; Burley and Holmesley. Bolderwood. Fritham: Eyeworth. Godshill: Ashley. Linwood; Broomy, Wilverley, Batramsley; Rhinefield. Lady-Crofs. South-Bailiwick; Whitley-Ridge.

BAILIWICKS.

BALLIWICKS.

East-Bailiwick,

and

The Nodes;

Inn-Bailiwick;

North-Bailiwick;

WALKS.

Denny - Walk, and the Nodes.

L Ashurst.

Ironshill.

Bramble-Hill.

Castle-Malwood.

Each of these bailiwicks is under the care of a master-keeper, appointed by the lord-warden of the forest. They have deputies under them, styled groom-keepers, whose duty it is to preferve the vert and venison within their respective walks. Besides these, the concerns of New Forest are regulated by the following officers:

The Lord-warden; appointed by letters patent under the great feal, during the king's pleafure.

The Lieutenant of the forest; an office which has been for some time vacant.

The Riding-officer; who, in case of His Majesty's visiting the forest, is to ride before him. It is a patent place, and nets 4241. 16s. annually.

K 2

901

The

The Bow-bearer; whose office is to attend the king while in the forest, with a bow and arrows; his falary is 40s. per annum, and a fee buck and doe.

The Rangers are appointed by the lord-warden, to keep the deer within the bounds of the forest. Their falary is 141. per annum; 41. in lieu of an ancient allowance of wood; and a fee buck and doe.

The Woodward's duty (now performed by deputy) is to attend on the assigning of wood for fuel; to take charge of windfal trees, &c. His salary is 2001. per annum; 501. a year for his deputy; and perquisites to the amount of 101. more. He is appointed by letters patent, during the king's pleasure.

The Verderors' office is a very ancient one. They are the judges of the sweinmote and attachment courts, and chosen by the free-holders of the county. They receive no recompence for their trouble, but a fee buck and doe, yearly.

The High-steward has a deputy called the under-steward, who transacts the business of the courts.

The

The Regarders; of whom there are twelve, are chosen by the freeholders of the county. They are to attend the marking of all timber to be felled in the forest. They have no annual salary, but an allowance of 2s. 6d. per day when on duty.

The forest courts are of very high antiquity, originating in the Anglo-Saxon age. There were formerly four of them; the court of attachment, woodmote, or forty days' court; the court of regard; the court of sweinmote; the court of justice-seat. The disuse, however, of forest-laws, and our gradual improvement in judicial processes, have occasioned these courts to be neglected; so that the only one now holden is the sweinmote, which sits twice or thrice in every year.

This extensive tract of country is most pleasingly diversified by hill and dale, 'dark-brown heaths,' and rich savannahs. It displays also much beautiful wood-scenery; being covered, in many spots, with every variety of noble tree which our country produces; and K3 these these in their highest perfection. The oak in particular delights in the foil of New Forest, as may be feen from feveral enormous ones in various parts of it. It is painful, however, to reflect that, from numerous causes, a few years bid fair to divest this place both of its beauty and utility; there being a great and continual confumption of its timber, and no plantations made to replace what is thus cut down. Plans have at different times been suggested to government, to remedy this evil; * but fomething or other has always arisen, to set them aside, or defeat their efficacy. In the mean time this noble magazine of naval timber is given up to abuse and depredation, without an effort to fave and regulate an object of fuch great national importance.

CHAP.

^{*} About three years fince, Mr. T. Nichols, purveyor of the navy for Portsmouth dock-yard, published a letter to Lord Chatham, suggesting several sensible observations, relative to the encouragement and promotion of the growth of timber in New Forest; which, if reduced to practice, might produce the desired effect. The commissioners appointed to inquire into the state and condition of forests, &c.; have detailed at large, in their fifth report, the means for remedying the existing abuses in New Forest, and making the district of more advantage to the nation;—plans which seem to merit more attention than has hitherto been betowed on them.

The western side of the river, from the picture resque mequality of the ground; that no durates in the most against the manner, and the rich which this adoined affords

C H A P. VII.

Diammond Efg.) six enversely into offing ; the pindic hand of Mr. Thoma having hiles by with most of a land magnicus the beautoff

Basus Planning small of most fett

SOUTHAMPTON RIVER, AND THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

he village and daniely of Pawley, hall

THE magnificent river formerly called Trifanton, but now denominated Southampton Water, adds greatly to the beauty of this part of Hampshire. The town stands on its eastern bank, about nine miles from the mouth; and four miles above Southampton it is navigable for vessels of two hundred and sifty tons burthen. The man who sinds delight in contemplating the beautiful scenes of nature, will not be a little gratised by sailing down this estuary, and remarking the various pleasing views and objects which decorate its banks.

The

The western side of the river, from the picturesque inequality of the ground, that undulates in the most agreeable manner, and the rich wood-scenery with which it is adorned, affords the greatest entertainment to the eye of taste. The lands around Cadland, (the elegant and truly-comfortable fummer-retreat of Robert Drummond Esq.) are extremely interesting; the plastic hand of Mr. Brown having filled up, with great tafte and judgment, the beautiful outline which nature had left for him to com-Two miles nearer the mouth of the river, the village and church of Fawley, half concealed by its luxuriant woods, form a most pleasing object. As a proof of the little communication which subsisted between country villages and large towns in former times, it is mentioned by tradition, that the events of the great rebellion were never known to the quiet inhabitants of Fawley parish. The dethronement and murder of Charles, the usurpation of Cromwell, and the re-establishment of the Stuart line on the throne, all occurred without involving these fortunate hinds in any of the anxieties, mischiefs, and distresses, which they they occasioned to the other parts of the kingdom. The situation indeed of this village is, as it were, an insulated one, being bounded on two sides by water, and on the other two by heaths.

At the mouth of Southampton river stands Caldshot Castle, a fortress built by Henry VIII. for the protection of the commerce of the town. Like the many other edifices of this kind, by the same monarch, on the coast of Hampshire, Caldshot Castle has long ceased to answer warlike purposes; it has, however, a governor, and two gunners.

The distance from hence to the Isle of Wight (a part of England which strongly invites the traveller's attention), is not more than five miles.

This valuable appendage to the crown, is in length, from east to west, twenty three miles; and in breadth, from north to south, thirteen. Its form is somewhat like a lozenge, comprizing about 100,000, superficial acres. Its uncommon fertility has procured it the appellation of The Garden of England, and perhaps not undefervedly; fince it may be confidered as the most productive tract in Britain, (if the Isle of Thanet be excepted,) the corn grown here, in one year, being equal to the consumption of ten.

Carillicok

Of the inhabitants of this island it has been thus expressed; "It was my fortune many "years ago to be at Newport on a fair-day—"the best mart for best looks and clothes in "the rural style. The whole scene was "fascination: 'orta salo,' sprung like Venus "from the sea, they seemed all of the Cyprian "line; at least there was not an individual "that did not appear a descendant of Hebe; "For health, high-circling, mantled in their

Such indeed is the purity of the air, the fertility of the foil, and the beauty and variety of the landscapes, that we would wish to recommend to persons who visit this island, not to content themselves barely with seeing Carisbrook

" cheeks."

Carisbrook castle, and the needle rocks at the west end, but to visit the southern and eastern parts which abound with delightful scenes.

Carisbrook castle, about a mile from Newport, was a place of strength in the time of the Britons; the Romans repaired it in A. D. 45, and Whitgar, to whom it was given by Cerdic, rebuilt it about 519. Richard de Rivers, Earl of Devonshire, re-edified it, and it was afterwards repaired by the governor of the island. It was also greatly repaired by Queen Elizabeth. It was frequently used as a state prison; the Earl of Arundel was kept here, in Richard the third's time, till he was condemned and beheaded; and King Charles I. was imprisoned here eight months, in 1648, by Colonel Hammond the governor.

The prospect from the keep or dungeon is most extensive and beautiful, taking in, as well as the sea to the north, east, and south, the New Forest and Portsdown. There was a well in it three hundred seet deep, but this is partly filled up as useless and dangerous.

The

The afcent to it on the outlide has feventy-two steps, each about nine inches, making fifty-four feet. Under a small building in the castleyard, is another well, above two hundred feet deep. By means of a large wheel, water is drawn from hence for the use of the garrison; and one poor ass, not long fince dead, had done this duty forty years, and was become a natural curiofity. A pin dropped, after more than three feconds, emits a found inconceivable to all who have not heard it. We must add that the tower of St. Catharine's chapel, built for the fafety of ships and vessels in the night, by lights, as well as for finging mass, is yet standing, being 750 feet above high-water level. It is thirty-five feet and an half high, octangular without, and quadrangular within; and has a pyramidical roof on each fide, both interior and exterior, of four feet.

We cannot here omit the opinion of Dr. Speed, that the place called the Street, west of Cowes, was a Roman way to Carisbrook; the passage to the Isle of Wight, before Cowes became a port, being from Leap, on the opposite opposite shore, to Gurnet-bay. Our limits will not permit us to enlarge on the history, either natural or civil; we shall therefore hasten to remark briefly those seats, &c. in the island which are most deserving of the stranger's attention. We shall begin with those towards the east end of the island, taking them as they occur to us, without too strict an attention to the shortest route.

Sir William Oglander's feat at Nunwell, in Brading parish, about seven miles east of Newport, is the first. This is the most ancient family in the island; although the house is situated in a vale, it is surrounded with woods and downs, from which latter is a most extensive and diversified prospect. Not only Portsmouth and Spithead, which are nearer, but Portsdown, and even Chichester steeple, and great part of Sussex, are seen. The fertile vale, the woods, meadows, and corn sields, with which the eye is presented, nearer to it, extending to Sandown-fort, at once delight and assonish. St Helen's Priory, the seat of Sir N. Grose, one of the judges of the court of king's-bench, about three miles to the north-east, is a pleasing spot, as is St. John's, the feat of General Amherst. Apsley, the feat of Mrs. Roberts, near Ride, is a small but elegant place, from whence Spitheadroad and Portsmouth appear to the greatest advantage. At Osborne, the feat of Robert Pope Blachford, efq., is an exceeding good modernbuilt house, which commands a fine view: in a wood still called the money coppice, Eustace Man, efq., whose grand-daughter married into this family, is faid to have buried fome valuable property during the civil war, which he could never find; though it is generally allowed that this island enjoyed a much happier state, at that time, than other parts of the kingdom.

We must not, before we leave this part of the island, omit Quar-Abbey, near Binsted, as affording matter of entertainment for the antiquarian. It is now the property of John Fleming Esq. of North Stoneham, near Southampton. Winchester cathedral was built with the stone from the quarries or stone-pits near this place, and probably this abbey had its name from thence. The refectory, or common hall, is now used as a barn. The gate towards the sea had a portcullis, and just above high-water mark appear the ruins of a fort, built in the time of Edward III. To the east of the hall, was the church or chapel of the monastery, and on the west are the vestiges of some vaulted cellars.

name

The cottage of Steephill, on the most eastern point of the island, was built by the late Right Honorable Hans Stanley, when governor of the island. Several foreign ambassadors and persons of rank have been entertained hereuniverfally pleafed with the romantic lituation, and delighted with the affishances which art has furnished to contribute to their amusement. It now belongs to the Hon. W. Tollemache: Shanklin-Chine, in passing around the coast of Sandown-Bay, is exceedingly romantic; it is overgrown with shrubs and bushes, and the fcene is most beautiful and picturesque. The path down to the fea is very steep, but about half way you are agreeably furprized to find a fisherman's cottage, in a most beautiful but feeluded L 2 fecluded spot. Further to the south is St. Boniface cottage, belonging to Colonel Hill—a place remarkable for the beauty and taste displayed on it, scarcely to be exceeded.

Loudly as our limits call upon us to stop, we cannot leave Appuldurcombe, the chief feat of the Worsley family, a little to the north from Steephill, without paying it a deserved tribute. An elegant gateway of the Ionic order, leads to a park well stocked with deer. The foil is very rich, and beeches of uncommon magnitude, interspersed with venerable oaks, form the back-ground above the house; and different eminences command the most extensive and grand prospects. On the east is seen St Helen's road, Spithead, and Portsmouth; and on the west, the cliffs of Freshwater, the Dorsetshire coast, and the Isle of Portland; the New Forest, and the channel which separates the island from the other part of the county, appear on the north; and on the fouth is the British channel. An obelisk of Cornish granite, nearly seventy feet high, crected to the memory of Sir Robert Worsley, ftands stands on the summit of the park; and on a rocky cliff, about a mile from the park, are the ruins of an old castle, which serves an object from the house. It shall suffice to add, that ten earthen pots or urns, filled with coals and bits of bones, were dug out of the bank of the moat of Stenbury manor-house, not far from hence, in 1727; hence it seems to have been a family cemetery, prior to the custom of burying in churchyards.

The stranger can hardly persuade himself to leave the island, till the rest of its beauties have been seen; and we must lament that we cannot accompany him for want of room. A sew general observations only must suffice, collected from the same authentic sources to which we have been already so much indebted.

A large ridge of hills runs through the island from east to west; on the south part is fine tobacco-pipe clay, of which great quantities are exported; and a fine white sand for making glass. On the west are the Needles, several large chalky rocks, one of which, near two hundred feet high, fell a few years ago. On the north-east are the Brambles, and on the east the Mixen. The perilous expedient of taking birds in the rocks of the island, particularly in Freshwater cliffs, must be here recorded. They descend by ropes, fixed to iron crows, which are driven into the ground; and thus suspended, beat down the birds with sticks, as they fly out of their holes. About a pound of foft feathers, which they fell for eight-pence, is produced by a dozen; and the fishermen buy the carcases at sixpence per dozen, to bait their crab-pots. Copperas stones are found in abundance, of good quality, about Alum Bay. A large pair of stag's horns were discovered, in 1624, by the mouldering of the cliff, about two fathoms in the ground; thefe had probably remained there ever fince the island was separated from the opposite shore. The country people also frequently dig nuts from the ground, which they call Noah's nuts; and the late David Urry, esq. of Afton, remembered one of the barrows on the Downs, at the west end of the island, being opened, which contained an urn full of bones. The

The whole island is about fixty miles in circumference. It has a most beautiful appearance, and may be considered as one of the most fertile spots in Europe. It was proposed, in the year 1629, to make the peninsula of Freshwater a place of retreat for the inhabitants, with their cattle, in case of invasion; by converting it into an island, cutting through the neck at Freshwater gate, and securing the passages with drawbridges and half-moons: Yarmouth, which has a garrison, was intended for the more considerable inhabitants. This as well as Newport, and Newtown, sends members to parliament.

We would wish to recommend the house of industry in this island as a model to the kingdom. It was established in 1775, and its salutary essects are well known. The principal employment is manufacturing hemp and wool, into sacking, kerseys, &c.

CHAP.

N. B. A Correct MAP of the Isle of Wight may be had of the publisher of this Guide, price 1s.6d: and on canvas with a case for the pocket, 2s.6d.

CHAP. VIII.

har a super or a first mass in horally son, when a

THE TOWNS, VILLAGES, AND SEATS, IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF SOUTHAMPTON.

NOTHING contributes more to the convenience and comfort of a town, than the excellence of the roads in its neighbourhood. These means of communication are in great perfection around Southampton; and being easily kept in repair, from the nature of the soil (which affords the best materials for their formation), are never impassable, or disagreeable to the traveller, even in the most inclement seasons. They are equally remarkable also, for their beauty and variety; stretching in all directions, through the New Forest, on the theone fide, and a richly-cultivated country on the other, they afford endless changes of scene, and different combinations of prospect. The one from Southampton to Lyndhurst, and thence to Lymington, cannot be passed without gratification. The former village is an elegant rural retreat, placed in the heart of the forest; and, in early times, was frequently reforted to by our monarchs, who repaired thither for the purpose of enjoying the chace. There is a large mansion, called the King's House, on the fite of which probably stood the ancient palace, erected for the reception of these royal hunters. The present building is of no great antiquity; the eastern, or oldest end, being of the age of Edward VI. or Elizabeth. Many years have elapsed, however, fince Lyndhurst has been regularly. honored with these royal visits; though the fatisfaction which our amiable monarch expressed on staying here a few days, in the year 1789, leads us to hope that he may occasionally fpend a short time at a place which has been, in distant ages, the theatre of much amusement to his ancestors. His Royal Highness the the Prince of Wales, also, who in the year 1794 reviewed a part of Lord Moira's army, at Lyndhurst, was highly gratified with this first visit to it, and with the grand forest-scenery with which it is surrounded.

MOUNT-ROYAL,

The feat of Robert Ballard, esq., is most delightfully situated on an elevated spot, immediately contiguous to Lyndhurst. It commands a magnificent, extensive, and varied view. The appellation which it at present bears, was bestowed on it by His Majesty, who, during his continuance here, surveyed the house and grounds, and honored them with this mark of his approbation. It is but justice to the worthy owner, to make this particular mention of a mansion,

"In whose kind haunt
"The hospitable genius lingers still;"

the external beauty and advantages of which, are equalled by the comfort, benevolence, and fociality that reign within.

CUFFNELLS.

CUFFNELLS.

The summer residence of George Rose Esq., next prefents itself. Though it derives many of its charms from the hand of nature, which has clothed it with noble timber, and flung the grounds about in a very advantageous manner: yet it is much indebted to the finger of art, for its more minute and elegant beauties. It is faid that the improvements which have taken place here during the possession of the present owner, are the offspring of female taste, and have been formed under the direction of Mrs. Rofe-a circumftance that does great credit to the lady, as they afford a pleasing instance of that rare combination of genius and judgment -fkill in the laying out of pleasure-grounds. -Hence we proceed to

LYMINGTON;

Which is a corporate town, and a borough by prescription; it is pleasantly situated on an eminence. From hence to the Isle of Wight is but a short passage by sea, not far from the celebrated rocks called the Needles. Here, and

and in the neighbourhood, are very famous falt-works, and the falt made here is faid to be the best in the kingdom. It has also a good dock, and the river on which it stands is navigable up to the quay for vessels of considerable burthen. This town is lately become a fashionable sea-bathing place.—About eight miles from Lymington is the village of

BEAULIEU;

Where was formerly an abbey of Cistertian monks. Its remains are still considerable; the abbey walls are pretty perfect, and by the ruins of foundations which appear in divers parts within them, we are assured its buildings must have been very extensive. The refectory is entire, and has long been converted into the parish church of Beaulieu village. The house where the prior was lodged is now used as a dwelling-house, and is very commodious.

From Dibden church-yard, exactly opposite Southampton, in New Forest, is a fine prospect, well worth the traveller's attention.

The

to

The first object on the road to the north is

BELLEVUE,

Which from its fituation at the junction of the Winchester and Portsmouth roads above the town must command universal attention. The fine prospect has given it a name, and the excellent order of the gardens, which are filled with the most curious plants, shrubs, and slowers, shew the great taste of its original owner, the late N. St. Andre, esq.

PADWELL, or BEVOIS MOUNT,

Is about a quarter of a mile further, on the right of the Winchester road. [For particulars fee page 84.]—On the opposite side, a little retired from the road, is BANNISTERS.

The rural feat of William Fitzhugh, esq. The many improvements and additions made in the pleasure-grounds, gardens, &c. by this gentleman, since it has been in his possession, have considerably increased its beauty.—Next to this, nearer the road, we see

M

CLAYFIELD.

CLAYFIELD,

The feat of Charles Mackett, esq. It is pleafantly situated; the house is neat; and the grounds are disposed in a judicious manner.— About six miles surther on is

CRANBURY,

The feat of N. Dance, efq.; in a beautiful fituation, which commands a fine prospect of Southampton Water and the Isle of Wight. Some fine ruins of an obelisk are in the park; but the house which is highly finished, has an apartment most splendidly decorated, being, only on a small scale, mostly like the Pantheon in London, with pillars of the same marmorean appearance. In proceeding about two miles farther to the north-west, we reach

HURSLEY,

Near which is the feat of Sir William Heathcote, bart., one of the present members for Hampshire. The house, which was built by his grandfather, is very grand and elegantly furnished. Oliver Cromwell had a house near the the fite of the present mansion; here, amongst other valuable paintings, is one of that distinguished character. The large bason of water surrounded with iron rails supplies the house; and the extent of the park and order of the garden, renders the whole exceeding pleasing. On returning directly south, by that part of Stoneham common to which Chilworth adjoins, the prospects are beyond description enchanting and picturesque. From hence by diverging a little to the right, in about a mile and a half we come to the pleasantly situated village of

TOOTHILL;

Where the eye is feasted with views most extensive and diversified. But the morning prospect exceeds in richness and luxuriancy, particularly about the time of high water in the Southampton river. The vestiges of a Danish camp are here visible.

On the Portsmouth road the first object that demands the attention of the inquisitive traveller, is

M 2

PORTS-

PORTSWOOD-HOUSE;

The refidence of General Stibbert in a delightful fituation; the house is finished in the most refined taste. The shrubberies, thro' which serpentine walks lead you around a beautiful lawn, are scarcely to be equalled either in variety or choice. The river Itchen forms a kind of bay at the bottom, skirted almost on all sides with verdant fields, and hanging woods. Proceeding forward we arrive at

SOUTH STONEHAM,

Which is about three miles from Southampton, on the banks of the river Itchen. Here is the house of Hans Sloane, esq. some time member in parliament for Southampton; a large and pleasant mansion, near to which is the church. The view of the river and its opposite banks is charming; and the rising hills, covered with trees, fields, farms, and cottages, present a pleasing scene, every where varying upon every change of situation.—At no great distance, on the opposite side of the river Itchen, is

TOWNHILL,

TOWNHILL.

A new and spacious house, the property of N. Middleton, esq.; which is finished and surnished in the most magnificent taste. As it is situated on an elevated spot, the views from the park and gardens are very extensive.—Farther to the north is the village of Swathling, where, leaving the Portsmouth road, we proceed to

NORTH STONEHAM.

Here is the feat of John Fleming, esq., once member for Southampton; the situation of the house is low, but it has excellent gardens, and an extensive park, full of sine timber, and deer. At the upper part of the park, westward, near the turnpike-road from Southampton to Winchester, is a summer-house, the situation of which, and the views from it are so beautiful, that it can scarce be equalled.

In the church, near the house, is a superb monument of Lord Hawke, who is interred therein. The battle of this great naval commander with Conslans, is executed in whitemarble, in a masterly manner. On it is the following inscription:

M 3

D. O. M.

D. O. M.

THIS MONUMENT IS SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF

EDWARD HAWKE,

LORD HAWKE, BARON OF TOWTON, IN THE COUNTY OF YORK, KNIGHT OF THE BATH, ADMIRAL AND COMMANDER OF THE FLEET, VICE ADMIRAL OF GREAT - BRITAIN, &c.

Who died October 17, 1781, aged feventy-two.

The bravery of his foul was equal to the dangers he encountered—the cautious intrepidity of his deliberations, superior even to the conqueits he obtained. The annals of his life compose a period of naval glory unparalleled in later times, for whenever he sailed victory attended him. A prince, unfolicited, conferred on him favors which he distained to ask.

THIS MONUMENT IS ALSO SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF

CATHARINE, Lady HAWKE, his Wife,

The beauty of whose person was excelled only by the accomplished elegance of her mind.

She died Oft. 9, 1756, aged 36.

In the conjugal, parental and focial duties of life, they were equalled by few, excelled by none.

We will next proceed towards Romsey, on which road the first object that strikes us, is

SHIRLEY-HOUSE,

The seat of William Greville, esq., in a pleasant situation, not far from the road side. The gardens are neat and extensive, and the house house commands a variety of prospects—Passing GROVE-PLACE, the seat of E. Meyler esq. we come to

BROADLANDS,

The feat of Lord Viscount Palmerston. The house is so highly finished in every part, that we are at a loss which to admire most; the chimney pieces—the doors, which are double, all of mahogany, and carved—the fine wainscot floors—the richness of the Indian paper, and surniture—and, above all, the capital paintings, claim the stranger's attention. The noble owner is the descendant of the illustrious Sir William Temple. The gardens, with the hot and green houses are kept in the best order, to enliven which the meandring course of the river Test greatly contributes. An American aloe was here in full bloom, in the year 1773.—Quitting Broadlands, we arrive at

ROMSEY,

About seven miles from Southampton. A monastery of Benedictine nuns, according to William William of Malmsbury, was founded here by King Edgar.

The church is an ancient building, well arched with free-stone, in the same manner as the oldest part of Winchester cathedral. On the outside of the north cross are marks of cannon-balls, fired in the civil wars, to batter it down. Here is a fine monument of Lady Palmerston, with an elegant inscription. That illustrious character Sir W. Petty, ancestor of the Marquis of Lansdown, who was born in this town, is buried here, in the south aisse of the chancel, under a slat stone, with this simple inscription,

HERE LAYES SIR WILLIAM PETTY.

A neat organ was erected in 1782, by subfcription of the neighbouring gentlemen and inhabitants—About a mile from hence, on the road to the Forest, is

PAUNCEFOOT, or PAIN's-FORT HILL,

For etymologists are divided. From the pasture grounds adjoining, you have a most extensive tensive prospect. Around the summit of the hill are various appearances of batteries having been placed there formerly; if so, though we cannot at present discover for what purpose, this would clearly determine the name of this pleasing situation.—Proceeding about two miles and an half further, we reach OWER, from whence diverging to the right, we come to

PAULTONS,

The feat of Welbore Ellis, esq. Here the beautiful lawns are every where terminated by the finest timber trees; the avenues to the house are shaded with large firs, and the artificial water, and bridges, seen from the house, present an agreeable scene.—Let us now return about a mile, on the road from Salisbury to Southampton, where on the right is

TATCHBURY MOUNT.

Tradition fays that Tatchbury was for a long time a hunting feat belonging to the crown, and that the house extended far northward to the present barton or yard. This probably was, when the court was held at Winchester, and and Southampton the frequent residence of the kings of this island. At this time, it is likely the king and his attendants had divine service performed here; the name of chapel field, which is still retained, seems to allude to it, and there are other circumstances to corroborate this opinion.—Leaving this delightful spot, though with much reluctance, we descend to

TESTWOOD;

Most pleasantly situated. The house is elegantly surnished; the shrubberies and plantations form a kind of amphitheatre; and the river, bridges, and shipping, in the front, improve the scene.—About half a mile from hence, on the road to Southampton, through Totton, is

REDBRIDGE,

Which lies on the borders of New Forest, at the influx of the Test into the Southampton river. It had formerly a small abbey. A pretty good trade is carried on here, in coal, timber, and corn.—Leaving this we come to Millbrook, Millbrook, a pleasant village, situated about a mile and an half from Southampton, on the borders of the water: about half a mile nearer, is

FREEMANTLE,

The feat of John Jarrett, efq. The house is well sheltered with trees, having a good garden, with a hot-house and shrubberies.

The POLYGON,

Must not be omitted. This is a groupe of buildings to the north of the town, that will attract our notice. The plan of this intended assemblage of elegant edifices was devised, by Mr. Leroux, an architect of Great Russel Street; it was to consist of twelve sides, having an house in the centre of each, with the proper offices low and detached. The principal fronts were contrived to appear outwards, and the gardens to converge towards a bason of water in the centre, which was to supply the several houses. The whole was to include about twenty-two acres of a fine gravelly soil, which being agreeably elevated, commanded a most most delightful prospect of Southampton Water as far as Caldshot Castle: with fine views of the New Forest and the town of Southampton. as well as many gentlemen's feats, and a distant view of the Isle of Wight. At the extremity a capital building was erected with two detached wings and colonades; of which the centre was an elegant tavern, with affembly and card-rooms, &c. and each wing was an hotel to accommodate the nobility and gentry. The tavern is now taken down, but the wings are still remaining, and are converted into genteel private houses. Could the plan be completed, it would be one of the first places in the kingdom, perhaps in the world, regarded in the view of modern architecture. We must not forget that the exterior part is encircled with a fine gravel road which is much frequented by company in carriages and otherwife for airing.

THE GOING OUT AND COMING IN

ır

STAGE-COACHES, MAILS, WAGGONS, &c.

COACHES, MAILS, &c.

ROCERS and Co's Eight-wheel Patent Coach, called the Royal George, fets out every morning, except Sunday, at half past five o'clock, from the Coach-and-Horses Inn, Southampton, to the Golden - Cross, Charing Cross, and Swan Inn, Lad-lane, London.

A Diligence every morning at fix o'clock, to the fame Inns.

A Mail coach every night at eight o'clock, to the Bell-and-Crown, Holborn.

A Mail toach to Poole, every morning, and returns the fame day.

A Mail coach to Lymington, every morning, and returns the same day.

A Post coach to Bath and Bristol, every morning, but Sunday, at fix o'clock.

A genteel coach to Oxford, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, at fix o'clock, and returns the following days.

N

A coach

A coach to Portsmouth, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning, at seven o'clock, and returns the same day.

A coach to Gosport, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning, at seven.

Genteel Post Coaches and Chaises may be had at the same Inn.

COLLYER'S Coach, called the Self-Defence, sets out every morning, except Sunday, at 5 o'clock, from the Star Inn, Southampton, and arrives at the Belle Savage, Ludgate-hill, London.

Cox and Co's London Mercury fets out from the Vine, every morning, except Sunday, at five o'clock, to the Saracen's Head, Snow-hill, London. Post Chaises may also be hired at the Vine Inn.

PRIMER and Co's Coach, called the Duke of York, arrives from Lymington every day, except Sunday, at twelve o'clock, and lets out from the Red-Lion at three in the afternoon of the fame day.

Rook's Van to and from Portsmouth and Salisbury, calls at the Red-Lion every day, except Sunday, at twelve o'clock.

From the Nag's Head, GINGELL'S Van fets out at nine o'clock every morning, except Sunday, to Winchester, and returns in the evening.

Anderson's Van sets out every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at ten o'clock, for Salisbury, and returns the following days.

WAG:

WAGGONS.

BROOKMAN'S London Waggons arrive every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at the Warehouse opposite the Royal George, Southampton, and set out the same days, at nine o'clock in the morning, for the Rose Inn, Holborn-bridge, call at the Old White-Horse-Cellar, and White and Black Bears, Piccadilly, London; and carry goods for Alressord, Winchester, Isle of Wight, Jersey, Guernsey, &c.

ASLETT'S London Waggons set out from the Royal George, every Wednesday and Saturday morning at nine o'clock, go through Swathling, Twyford, Alresford, &c. and arrive at the Oxford Arms, Warwick-lane, London, every Friday and Tuesday, and return to Southampton every Tuesday and Friday. They call, going in and coming out of London, at the New White-Horse-Cellar, and White Bear, Piccadilly.

COLLINS'S Reading Waggon arrives at the Royal George every Monday, goes out again the fame day, and carries goods for Basingstoke, &c.

COLLINS'S Winchester Waggon comes to, and goes from the Royal George every day.

Colleur's Oxford and Birmingham Waggon comes in every Thursday, and returns the same day, through Winchester, Whitchurch, Newbury, Isley, and Abingdon.

NEWELL'S Bath and Bristol Waggon comes in every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and goes out again the same days; calls at the Swan, Warminster; the Angel, Bath; and the Bunch of Grapes, St. Thomas's street, Bristol.

PLASKET'S Lymington Waggon comes in every Tuesday and Friday, and returns the same days; takes in goods for Redbridge, Totton, Lyndhurst, and the neighbourhood.

PACKETS AND HOYS.

A packet fets out for the Isle of Wight, every morning, except Monday, about eight o'clock, after taking in the mail, and returns every evening, Sunday excepted.

The hoys seldom sail less than three times a week to Portsmouth, though they are not so regular as they used to be before they were obliged to make their entries at the Custom-house.

Packets are continually failing backwards and forwards, between Southampton and Havre-de-Grace, and Cherbourg, in time of peace; being provided with every convenience for the accommodation of passengers, &c.

Trading vessels are constantly sailing from this port to the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, well accommodated for passengers.

Pleasure-yachts, boats, &c. may be hired at any time for naval excursions.

RATES

RATES OF THE CHAIRS.

From any part of the town within the gates, to or from the Long-Rooms, or to any other part within the gates, 6d.

From any part without the gates, to any other part without the gates, 6d.

From any part within the gates to any part without the gates, or from any part without, 9d.

From any part of the town, to St. Mary's, 1s.

For every chair kept longer than ten minutes, 6d. extraordinary, and so on for every half hour afterwards.

When chairmen are called, or ordered to attend after eleven o'clock at night, 1s. to any part of the town, except from the Long Rooms on ball nights.

Double fare to stop and get out, if only stop a short time and not get out, but single fare.

The end of the pavement Above Bar, and the end of Lower East-street, are the limits of the town.

A

PERPETUAL TIDE-TABLE,

SHEWING

THE TIME OF HIGH-WATER

SOUTHAMPTON.

Moon's Age.	TIME OF HIGH WATER.		Moon's Age.	TIME OF HIGH WATER.
ge.	M orning.	Afternoon.	Se.	Morning.	Afternoon.
0	11 0	11 25	15	11 5	11 30
1	11 50	MET X . 7 12	16	11 55
2	0 15	0 40	17	0 20	0 45
3	1 5	1 30	18	1 10	1 35
4	1 55	2 20	19	2 0	2 25
3 4 5 6	2 45	3 10	20	2 50	3 15
6	3 35	4 0	21	3 40	4 5
78		4 50	22		4 55
8	4 ² 5 5 ¹ 5 6 5		23	4 30 5 20 6 10	5 45
9	6 5	5 40 6 30	24	6 10	6 35
10	6 55	7 20	25	7 0
11		7 20 8 10	26	7 50	7 ² 5 8 15
12	7 45 8 35	90	27	7 50 8 40	9 5
13	9 25	9 50	28	9 30	9 55
14	10 15	10 40	29	10 20	10 45

Low Water is always five hours after every

THE

DISTANCES OF ROADS,

FROM SOUTHAMPTON

To the PRINCIPAL TOWNS in ENGLAND,

ACCURATELY DESCRIBED.

floke.	ing-	ford.	ILES.
TT7	ILES.	Farnham, as before,	38
WINCHESTER	12	Guildford	10
Popham Lane	12	Epfom	14
Bafingftoke	6	Westminster-Bridge	16
Hook	6
Hartford-bridge	4	Total	78
Bagfhot	10
Egham	9	Another Road by King	An
Hounflow ?	ģ	12mother 2tours y 2ting	June
Brentford	3	Guildford, fee above,	48
Hyde-Park-Corner	3 7	Esher	13
		Kingfton
Total	78	Wandfworth	5
		Westminster-Bridge	6
Another Road by F	arn-
ham.		Total	78
Winchester	Ţ2	1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 -
Alresford	7	To Salisbury.
Alton	10	10 Saigeury.	1.1
Farnham	9	Romfey	8
Bagihot	12	White Parish	8
Hyde-Park-Corner	28	Salisbury	7
22,720 1 11/12 0 0 1/10 1		tue on
Total	78	Total	22

Another Road th	rough	Another Road	•
New-Forest.			MILES.
	MILES.	Salisbury, see before	22
Redbridge	4	Woodyate's Inn	IO
Plaitford	7	Blandford	13
Salisbury	11	Dorchefter	16
	-	Bridport	15
Total	22	Axminster	12
		Honiton	10
To Bath and Brife	tol.	Exeter	16
Salisbury, see above,	22	Total	114
Devizes	22
Bath	19	A nearer Road	1.
Briftol	12	and mountain around
		Ringwood	. 20
Total	75	Winborne	10
Name (Indiana)		Blandford	IO
Another Road.		Dorchester-	16
Salisbury	22	Bridport	15
Warminster	22	Axminster	12
Bath	16	Honiton .	10
Briftol	12	Exeter	16
Bittoi			6 -
Total	72	Total	109
·
To Exeter.		To the Land's I	End.
Salifbury	22	Exeter, see above,	109
Shaftesbury	20	Okehampton	22
Milbern Port	13	Launceston	19
Sherborn	3	Bodmin	20
Yeovil	5.	St. Michael	15
Crewkhern	10	Truro	8
Axminster	13	Helftone	17
Honiton	10	Penzance	12
Exeter	16	Land's End	u
	_		_
Total Total	112	Total	233

Another Road to the Land's End.	Another Road by Portf-
MILES.
St. Michael, as before, 18	Katley
Redruth	Wickham
Penzance Land's End	Portfdown 6
Land's End	Partimouth 6
Total 228	THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE
10tai 228	Total 26
A THE STATE OF THE	To Remently 1
To Falmouth.	A STATE OF THE STA
Truro, as before,	To Gofport.
Falmouth
	Titchfield 6
Total 20
,
T ATOMA O	Total 23
To Plymouth.
Exeter, fee before, 100	Another Road, over the
Chudleigh	Ferries, andativ
Ashburton
Ivy-Bridge	1 ttcnin rerry
Plymouth	Bursledon Ferry 4.
Land Alberta
Total 15:	Gosport 7
Another Road.	Total 15
Exeter 10
Newton-Bushel I
	To Lymington.
Modbury	#####################################
Plymouth
	_
Total 15	Total 18
· 40 1 1
	T- P-1
To Portsmouth.	To Poole.
Botley
	Christchurch
Portfmouth	Peole galas
	-
EL INGT Total 20	S Laso Total 42

Another Road by Ring-	To Taunton.
wood.	Shaftesbury, see before, 42
MILES.
Ringwood 20	77 (31)
Langham 8
Poole 6	Taunton 27
Total 34	Total 90

T W	To Andover.
To Weymouth.
Ringwood 20
Winborne	otockbilege 10
Blandford	Andover
Dorchefter 16
	I a loral 22
Weymouth
	To Oxford.
Total 64	THE PARTY OF THE P
A nearer Road.	Bafingfloke 30
	Aldermason
Winborne, see above, 30	Pangborne
Wareham
Weymouth 16
A Transfer Action to Commercial Actions	The state of the s
Total 58	Total 69
	1 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2
m 'man	Another Road.
To Wells.	4 1. 12 1.7 to 10 1. 2 1.7 to 10 10 to Salisbury 2
Wilton	Whitchurch 14
Warminster	Newbury 13
Frome
Wells
	- Oxford 7
Total 6
1 July 2	Total 6
The Allendary Control of the Control	1 Otal
To Reading.	AND THE PROPERTY OF A STATE OF THE PARTY OF
	To Marlborough.
Winchester
Basingstoke + 1
Reading	Marlborough
The second secon
Total 4	7 Total 53

Oxford, see before, 67 Bicester 13 Buckingham 12 Newport Pagnel 14 Bedford 13 Cambridge 28 Total 147 Total 147 To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmeshury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 Total 94 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 12 Total 28 Alresford 20 Petersfield 13 Total 33 To Chickester & Bright-helmstone. Portsdown, see before, 20 Havant 4 Chichester 9 Arundel 9 Findon 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 62 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Another Road. To Tunbridge-Wells Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 15 Tunoridge Wells 12 Total 28 Total 99	To Cambridge.		Another Road.
Bicefter Buckingham Buckingham Buckingham Bedford Bedford Bedford Total Bedford Total Bedford Total Total Bedford Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Bedford Total Total Total Total Total Total Bedford Total Total Total Total Total Bedford Total
Buckingham Newport Pagnel Bedford Cambridge Total Total
Newport Pagnel Bedford Cambridge Total 147 Total 147 To Gloucefter. Devizes, see before, Chichefter & Brighthelmstone. Portsdown, see before, Chichefter 9 Arundel 9 Findon 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Total 120 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12			Petersneld	13
Total 147 Total 147 Total 147 To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Another Road. To Tunbridge-Wells. Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Uckfield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Total 92 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 94 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12			 1
Total 147 Total 147 To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 74 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 123	사이들은 이 집에 보고 보는 것이 없는 것이었다면 없는 것이었다면 없는 것이 없는 것이었다면 없는데		1 otal	33
Total 147 To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 Total 94 Total 94 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123
To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123	Cambridge	28		ght-
To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 To Peterssield. Waltham 14 Peterssield 14 Peterssield 14 Peterssield 14 Peterssield 15 Devizes, see before, 20 Havant 4 Chichester 9 Arundel 9 Findon 10 Brighthelmstone 10 Another Road. Another Road. Total 62 To Tunbridge-Wells. To Tunbridge-Wells. To Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12	Total	147	helmstone.
To Gloucester. Devizes, see before, 44 Chippenham 11 Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Gloucester 17 Total 94 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Another Road. Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Uckfield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Total 92 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12			Portsdown, see before,	20
Devizes, see before, Chippenham Chippenham Chippenham Chippenham Chippenham Chippenham Cirencester Coloucester Cirencester Cirencester Coloucester Coloucester, fee above, 42 New Shoreham Brighthelmstone Cirencester Coloucester Coloucester, fee above, 42 New Shoreham Cirenter Cirencester Coloucester Coloucester, fee above, 42 New Shoreham Cirentester Coloucester Colouceste	To Clause Han
Devizes, see before, Chippenham Chippenham Chippenham Cirencester Coad. Another Road. Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Coad. Arundel seabove, 42 New Shoreham Brighthelmstone Cirencester Cirentes Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester Cirencester	10 Gioucejier.
Chippenham Malmesbury 10 Cirencester 12 Total 62 Total 94 Another Road. To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 124 Total 125	Devizes, see before,	44
Malmesbury Cirencester Gloucester Total To	Chippenham	11
Total 94 Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Peterssield 14 Total 62 Total 62 To Tunbridge-Wells. Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Uckfield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 92 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12	Malmefbury	IO
Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 120 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 14 Total 52 Another Road. Arundel, see above, 42 New Shoreham 14 Brighthelmstone 6 To Tunbridge-Wells. Brighthelmstone, seebefore, 62 Lewes 8 Ucksield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12	Cirencester	12	7.0
Total 94 To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Ross 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Peterssield. Waltham 14 Peterssield 14 Total 62 Another Road. Arundel, see above, 94 New Shoreham 14 Brighthelmstone 6 To Tunbridge-Wells. Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Uckfield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12	Gloucester	17	Total	62
To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Ross 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Peterssield 14 To Worcester 94 New Shoreham 14 Brighthelmstone 6 To Tunbridge-Wells. Brighthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes 8 Uckfield 8 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunbridge Wells 12			remail month book the little
To Worcester. Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123	Total	94		ina.
Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury Worcester 15 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12
Gloucester, see above, 94 Tewksbury 11 Worcester 15 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12	To Worcester.	10
Total 120 Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs Hereford 13 Total 23 Total 123 Total 92 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12		0.4	Brighthelmstone	6
Total 120 To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Ross 16 Hereford 13 Total 123				•
Total 120 To Hereford. Cloucester, see above, 94 Ross 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 14 Total 14 Tunoridge Wells 13 To Total 123 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12			Total ,	62
To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs 16 Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 14 Total 14 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12	W Ofceller
To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Ross Hereford Total Total Total To Petersfield. Waltham Petersfield Petersfield Righthelmstone, see before, 62 Lewes Uckfield Tunbridge Wells Total Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking Westerham Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12	Total	720	To Tunbridge-We	us.
To Hereford. Gloucester, see above, 94 Ross Hereford Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking Westerham Sevenoaks Tunoridge Wells Table Total T	A STATE OF THE STA	120	Brighthelmftone feebefo	re.62
Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs Hereford 13 Total 123 Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 14 Tunbridge Wells 14 Tunbridge Wells 14 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12	The second Second Second Second			2
Gloucester, see above, 94 Rofs Hereford Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Total Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12	To Hereford.		를 보고 있는데 10 M 전략 10 M	8
Rofs Hereford Total Total Total Total Total Another Road. Guildford, fee before, 48 Darking Wefterham Sevenoaks Fetersfield Tunoridge Wells Total 72 Another Road. Tunoridge Wells	Gloucester, see above.	0.4
Total 123 Total 123 Another Road. Guildford, see before, 48 Darking 13 Westerham 21 Sevenoaks 5 Tunoridge Wells 12
Total 123 To Petersfield. Waltham 14 Petersfield 14 Tunoridge Wells 12	이 보고 있다. 하는 경기 가게 하는 것이 되었다. 아프 그 사람들은 사람들이 되었다면 하게 했다면 하다.		Total	92
To Petersfield. Waltham Petersfield To Petersfield Waltham Petersfield Tunoridge Wells Tunoridge Wells		_	Another Pond
To Petersfield. Waltham Petersfield 14 Petersfield Tunoridge Wells Tunoridge Wells	Total	123
Waltham 14 Sevenoaks 5 Petersfield 14 Tunbridge Wells 12		405.0		48
Waltham Petersfield 14 Sevenoaks Tunoridge Wells 12	To Petersfield.			STATISTICAL Petersfield 14 Tunoridge Wells 12
	retersheld		1 unoridge Wells	12
Total 99	Total
	1 otal	28	Total	99

To Margate. MILES.	To Yarmouth in Norfolk,
Westerham, see before, 82	through Chelmsford.
Maidstone 21	MILES.
Sittingborne 12	London, see before, 78
Canterbury 20	Rumford 12
Margate 16	Chelmsford 17
	Ipfwich 40
Total tot	Beccles 39
	Yarmouth 15
Another Road.	70.1
Tunbridge Wells, fee beforeg2	Total 201
Sittingborne 34	The Company of the Company
Canterbury 20	To York, thro' Warwick,
Margate 16	Coventry, Derby, Leeds.
	Oxford, fee before, 67
Total 160	Shipfton 28
	Warwick 16
A Bridle Road from Tun-	Coventry
bridge Wells to Margate.	Burton on Trent 32
A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR	Derby . ii
Tunbridge Wells 92 Goudhurft 11	Chefterfield 24
	Leeds
	York
(1) (1) (1) (1) (1) (1) (1) (1) (1) (1)
Margate 16	Total 253
Total 153	T 7
A Company of the State of the S	To Peterborough by
To Shrewfoury & Chefter.	Northampton.
Worcester, see before, 120	Oxford, fee before, 64
Kidderminster 15	Brackley 23
Bridgnorth 17	Northampton 20
Shrewsbury 20	Wellingborough
/ Whitchurch 20	Oundle 19
Chefter	Peterborough 12
Total 212	Total 152

